Had ful but eminently natural in exprescolor and pose. The rarity of Holbein miniatures is extreme and, this being perfectly authenticated specimen and of the very finest work, the Messrs. Duveen felt justified in beating all records in order to secure it. The underbidder was George Salting, who is supposed to be in the market for J. Pierpont Morgan.

The fineness of the workmanship is almost inconceivable. To get a proper appreciation of it a magnifying glass is necessary. The more closely the gold jeweled fligree work on the neck is examined the more perfect it appears. It is generally regarded as the best example of Holbein's miniature work in existence.
