Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

THE GUARDIAN

BY FREDERICK ORIN BARTLETT

"Poor little thing!" she called.

"Ain't nothin' poor 'bout him," Flint corrected her, with some feeling.

"I—I didn't mean that he didn't have enough to eat," apologized Julie. "But it seems so hard for him to be left alone."

"Alone? Who's alone?" Flint bristled up. "Ain't he got Tommy and me? Julie glanced uneasily over her shoulder. "I bet he wishes he was," answered lint. "Ye can't git him outer the house om Saturday night till Monday morn-

She sat down by the side of Flint and ook the child in her arms.

"His name is Nat," Flint informed her.
"He isn't old enough for a name," aughed Julie. "It's a good thing to have a name," said Flint, "She would have been better off if she'd had one."

Julie shuddered.
"Right thar in that room she died," explained Flint with a nod towards the corner. "It was mighty hard for her to eave the kid." The chubby bands were fumbling about Julie's neck. The touch of them sent a

The pity of it," answered Julie.

"Right," answered Flint. "An' the luck of it for the man who left her. I'd hate to be him and run foul of Nat."

The girl met Flint's eyes for a second. There was no vestige of suspicion there. She felt ashamed of herseif. It was almost like accusing this child in arms of wrong to accuse Nat. And after all, what did it greatly matter? The point was that here was a new being who had come into the world by whatever means dependent upon the Just and kindness of those who had been here much longer. She placed the child on the rug and rose with an air of authority.

"Tye come over to see if there's anything I can do to help you with him," she announced.

"With Nat?"

"With this Nat," she replfed, stooping to kiss the child.

"Do we need any help, Tommy?" inquired Flint.

"What for?" demanded Tommy.

Do we need any help, Tommy?" inquired Flint.

"What for?" demanded Tommy.

"Now, look here, you two," broke in Julie. "You don't think you can bring up this child all by yourselves, do you?"

"I reckon," nodded Flint; "Nat and us."

"Well, you can't," she assured them.

"Now, where are his clothes?"

"Mrs. Page does those," said Tommy.

"Well, I'm going to help her from now on. Besides, you don't want to be piggy about the baby, do you?"

"Flint bristled up.

"We don't want no charity, neither."

"Charity!" laughed Julie. "Do you hink anyone would call it charity to have the chance to care for such a dear little inte as—as Nat?"

"Didn't know," answered Flint "Do.

"Didn't know," answered Flint. "But if ye don't mean it that way, I'll show ye where we keep his things."
He led the way to an old high-boy, one off the purchases at the Lovell auction. She remembered that Nat had spoken to her of this and asked her if it would be useful in the new home. She had refused to answer him, but he had added:
"I'll get it anyhow. It will come in Dear, stubborn Nat! He shouldn't have talked as he did or acted as he did, but the sight of the beautiful old piece of mahogany brought the mist to her eyes. She felt as familiar with It as though it had come out of her own room. Queer how much like home this whole house

Shock Upset The Nerves

This letter from Mrs. Tweedle is interesting, because it shows how nervous trouble develops gradually from such derangements as stomach trouble, until prostration and loco-motor ataxia or paralysis render the victim helpless.

It is even more important because it tells how the writer was cured by or. Chase's Nerve Food, the greatest of nerve restoratives. Mrs. T. F. Tweedle, Brighton, Ont. writes: "For years I was troubled with the stomach, and have always

Mrs. Page greeted Julie affectionately, but more as a welcome friend than as a daughter-in-law. She had never been able to grasp the fact of 'Gene's marriage. It had come to her as such a surprise, and she had seen so little either of the girl or her son since then, that she accepted it more as a well-founded report than an established fact.

"I'm glad to see you over here, Julie," she said, as though the latter's presence were a cause for some surprise.

"I knew the child had your care or I'd have come before," replied Julie.

"My care?" returned Mrs. Page. "Land let me in the door."

Tommy looked away guiltily. Flint spoke up.

"There ain't no reason for it," declared Mrs. Page. "I s'pose you've heard all the stories goin' round?"

"Yes," admitted Julie.

"The people who started them ought to be put in jail," growled Moulton.

"Then you'd have to put the whole neighborhood in jail," answered Mrs. Page. "But I s'pose you have to expect such things when a man makes such a fool over a young un as Nat has made of this one."

"Not for once," Tommy assured her.
Then Julie stood by and watched a most solemn and impressive ceremony. First, with Tommy by his side to watch every move, went down the cellar and brought up a bottle of milk. With the alf of chemists measuring to the fraction of drams, they poured into a second bottle exactly ten ounces of milk. Tommy then went into the kitchen and returned with a dipper of boiling hot water. They placed the result as though expecting a spectacular reaction. At the end of five minutes there was another council of war as to whether the proper temperature had been reached. In this Nat, Junior, joined with very decided opinions that it was all right.
