They dragged it onto green sward in the yard and a noisy, jolly time they had, dancing and pounding on the sack with bare feet and broom sticks until the mess in the sack was churned to a jelly. They next dumped the sack into a trough of running water, beating and churning and anlashing it about with shouts of fun until the jelly pulp had been coarse sacking, and the seeds alone left a sticky, wet, shiny mass, that was dried with careful spreading and frequent stirring and made two quarts .-

A correspondent writes: "As many of your readers are off or going to the country, where not a few are likely to vicitms to the poison oak (pcison ash and poison ivy are its alias) tell them that the best and almost always unfailing remedy is crude petroleum as a lotion. I have seen a child whose face was terribly swollen and distorted, and whose sufferings were pitiable, almost instantly relieved and kept comfortable until the inflammahad passed away.

The largest freight wagons in the world are now, it is asserted, made in San Leandro, Cal., for steam freighting in connection with traction engines, the capacity of these wagons being 16 tons each, and with sufficient wheel surface to sustain that amount without injury to the roads. The dimensions and details show the size of axles to be 4 inches in diameter, front wheels 4 feet 10 inches high and 16 inches width of tire; rear wheels 6 feet high and tires 16 inches wide; length of bed, 19 1-2 feet, and six feet high. These are made wholly of iron and steel, except the bed, which is of wood. The front wheels track somewhat wider than the rear ones, due to the fact that the continual hauling over the road, and the wagons always running in the same tracks, naturally cuts down the road into ruts to a certain extent, rendering it uneven. To overcome this, the engine wheels are 26 inches wide and the front wheels of the wagons so de signed that the tire tracks will lap onehalf the width of the engine wheels on the inside.

Glass Imitation of Wood. A patent has been taken out for singular but ingenious process for making glass veneers. The invention relates primarily to the production ornamental glass, which may be either semi-transparent or opaque, and is made to represent high!y-po!ished wood of any description. When used for veneering, it is particularly adapted for vestibule and other doors, the exterior of the glass having the appearance of polished wood, while in the interior of the house it shows semitransparent. The process by which this material is produced is to cloud a sheet of ground or plain glass on one side with a liquid dye of the proper color to represent any desired wood. The dye is applied by means of a sponge, is so manipulated as to bring out the semblance of the grain of the wood upon the surface of the glass. A badger brush is used to soften the shading. The glass is then covered with photographers' varnish. leaves the grain clear and fast, without the necessity of using any gelatinous substance which would render it liable to crack and spoil the effect. To complete the operation the glass is elightly heated and the various shades required for the particular wood to be itated are caused to flow over it by means of a syringe. The merging of the shadings into each other is prevented by the heating of the glass. The whole is made semi-transparent by the application of another coat of photographers' varnish, which preserves and protects the dyes. The exterior surface then presents the apearance of a finely-polished, solid wood finish. House-Building Ideas.

A house at Chamounix, built on what principles of construction, is claimed to possess, as its most remarkable feature, constant temperature, in addition to its strength, durability, comfort and beauty. The builder, M. Caron, first put up a frame of steel water tubing. allowing continuous circulation to a stream of water, and around the frame the house was put up, the peculiarity being that all the floors and ceilings are crossed and recrossed by the water pipes-the water after passing through the horizontal tubes first, that is, under the floors and cellings, passes through the vertical tubes until all have been similarly treated. In summer, spring- water, fresh as is only the water of the snow-capped Alps, circulates under the pressure through the net-work of tubes, cools off the walls, and, after having run its course, flows off considerably warmer than when it entered. But in its course it has abaway. During the long and severe winter, the water, entering through the basement, is first heated to nearly 100 degrees, and then forced through the tubing. Of course, much of the heat is left all over the house, and at the outlet the temperature of the water is about 40 degrees, and the speed of the circulation of water is regulated so as to allow the fling of a certain temperature for the house, which is equal throughout. The house measures about 6,000 cubic yards and weighs 120 tons.
