A Few Press Opinions.

Scotsman.

"In his new story, 'Torn Sails,' Mr. Allen Raine fully maintains and strengthens the position as a novelist which his 'Welsh Singer' indicated for him. It is a tender and beautiful romance of the idyllic; a charming picture of life in a Welsh seaside village. It is something of a prose poem, true, tender, and graceful. It is also a charming picture of an interesting and by no means familiar scene of life and manners, in which the humorous traits, though, are rich enough to enliven and brighten the whole."

N.B. Daily Mail.

"The expectations aroused by 'A Welsh Singer' have not been disappointed by Mr. Raine's latest work which is surpassingly beautiful. The absorbing interest of the whole story is the strongest tribute to the author's power of characterisation."

Dundee Advertiser.

"Lovely pictures are given here and there in the book. No recent novel has a more graceful influence and promised greater things for its author's future. Wales should be proud of her new novelist."

Daily Telegraph.

"'Torn Sails' is a beautiful novel; the theme, the characters, and the setting are so exactly suited to each other that they mould the book into a harmonious and most artistic whole."

Punch.

"Allen Raine promises to do for Wales what Mr. Barrie and Ian Maclaren have done for Scotland; an idyllic story charmingly told."

Western Morning News.

"This latest effort of the Welsh novelist fully maintains his reputation as a vigorous and pleasant writer. His story of Welsh village life is indeed charming: a well-conceived plot abounding in striking situations."

Church Times.

"A tale of the simple fisher folk of the Welsh village, charmingly and touchingly told. The story is well worth reading from end to end."

Pall Mall Gazette.
