He said that the season was so late in central and northern Alberta that barley was about the only crop the farmers could put in this spring, and that he did not think it fair to deprive them of their principal market.

Sir George Foster, replying to Dr. Clark, said there was no injustice in depriving a man of a market to which he had no right. Certainly in the present crisis, when food was essential to the allies, there was no justification in a farmer growing barley for the manufacture of beer. Certainly in the present crisis, when food was essential to the allies, there was no justification in a farmer growing barley for the manufacture of beer. He had better dispose of the barley for other purposes. The government, however, could not accept Mr. Devlin's motion and shut off the supply of grain to distillers because the distillers were furnishing the imperial munitions board, the said, all grain used by the distillers in the part year was more than accounted for by the alcohol they had furnished to the munitions board. The government had however, been pressed on many questions to prohibit the further manufacture of alcoholic liquors in Canada during the war, and the subject was receiving careful consideration. He internated that some announcement on this subject might be expected in the near future.

If we cannot make bread out of the corn now used to make whiskey we can feed that corn as fodder. I say, therefore, it is the duty of the government to move in the direction of the motion before the house, and I believe the government is prepared to do so. At the same time, I am satisfied that many of our distilleries are not making potable liquor, but instead are supplying spirits for use in the manufacture of explosives."

The government had no right to take away from the farmer his market for barley, especially in some portions of the country where barley was the only crop he could produce.

With this proposition the government could not agree. A man had no right to take away from the farmer his market for barley, especially in some portions of the country where barley was the only crop he could produce.
