SCIENTIFIC MEAL, 1,000 HEAT UNITS, FOR TEN CENTS

Restaurant on Plan Suggested by Prof. Lusk Projected for New York by a Bostonian.

PORK AND BEANS IDEAL FOOD, SAYS BANCHOR

He Eats Them Twice a Day Nearly Every Day, He Assures Us, So He Ought to Know.

NEW YORK, May 30.—A scientific restaurant where one may obtain enough nutrition for ten cents is to be opened in the Bowery, New York. It has been scientifically demonstrated that enough properly-balanced food to keep an average man in good condition is not expensive.

The food which it is proposed to serve at this restaurant for ten cents contains enough calories (heat units) for an average person doing light work. Prof. Graham Lusk of the Department of Physiology at Cornell Medical College, has arranged the menu, based on the assumption that persons engaged in different kinds of labor require different amounts of calories. A man who lies abed twenty-four hours requires only 1400 calories. A man abed for eight hours and in a chair fourteen hours, and having moderate exercise for two hours, requires 2800 calories. The average farmer needs 3500 calories.

The meal which will be served at this scientific restaurant will give exactly 1000 heat units, enough for a luncheon for a man doing light work.

Prof. Lusk has arranged this menu, giving 1000 units for ten cents.
7 1/2 ounces of beans
1 ounce of pork
2 1-8 ounces of butter
5 ounces of milk and 5 ounces of coffee, mixed.

Three such meals mean 3000 heat units, and if one eats a heavier meal in the evening, with this scientific luncheon of beans and pork, he will obtain enough calories for anything less than hard physical labor.

Prof. Lusk at a meeting of the Academy of Medicine in March, said he wished that some public spirited person would establish restaurants where an almost ideally nutritive meal of pork, beans, bread, coffee and milk could be served for ten cents.

The Bostonian, George E. Banchor of No. 44 Broadway, communicated with Prof. Lusk on the subject, and as a result Mr. Banchor is preparing to open a restaurant in the Bowery on Prof. Lusk's plan.

"I know," said Mr. Banchor, "that

The Ambition of a Lifetime Can be Realized

amid the beauty and quiet of STEWART MANOR. A comfortable, attractive home, with surroundings unsurpassed for natural beauty.

This is the ambition of many, and it can be realized to the greatest extent in STEWART MANOR. Beautiful sturdy oaks, the best and cleanest of trees, running streams, pretty lakes, rolling hills and green grass—all this but 25 minutes' direct ride from the very heart of Toronto—King and Yonge streets.

Besides this, its close proximity to the lake makes boating and bathing a very real pleasure, while Scarborough Beach Park, just opposite, affords music, amusement and general relaxation.

STEWART MANOR lots are high and dry, being naturally self-draining, sidewalks are laid and paid for, roadways are graded, and the other improvements now being installed.

In spite of the fact of its being right in the city—of its natural beauty, and that the land east and west is completely built up, STEWART MANOR is very reasonably priced from $60 a foot up, and terms are good.

Now is the time to buy and build. The choicest situations are open and the land can be built on immediately.

a plate of beans and pork prepared as prescribed by Prof. Lusk can be sold for ten cents. Beans and pork are ideal food; I can eat them twice a day, nearly every day. In opening such a restaurant it is important to select a location handy to a large number of people who cannot afford high prices for meals. I agree with Prof. Lusk that the Bowery is the place. But what part of the Bowery? To determine this I am consulting settlement workers."

HANDSOME LOGGER WAS 'BEARDED LADY'

Smoked and Played Cards and Sues Man Whom She Claims
as a Husband.

BANGOR, May 30.—Up to Friday afternoon James George was regarded by the people of Kingfield merely as a good-natured and rather handsome man of forty, who was a good worker in the novelty mill, dressed well and preferred cigars to the ordinary workman's pipe. He was something of a favorite with the boys, but seemed to prefer James Jameson as a chum, often taking long walks with him.

On Friday, however, it developed that James George was not a man at all, but a woman, and that she came to Kingfield to find James Jameson, whom she claimed as her husband. She informed Deputy Sheriff Hinds that Jameson had deserted her and wanted him arrested. Hinds sent her to Farmington to interview Sheriff Small, and at last accounts she was there.

The experience of the deserted wife, as she relates it, rivals that of the husband of another girl in order that she might get a man's wages. She says that her name is Mrs. Georgiana Jameson; that she is thirty-eight years old, and that she has a daughter of nineteen by a former marriage, and a child of three of which Jameson, her second husband, is the father. She was for some years the "bearded lady" in the Barnum Circus, but that six years ago her husband, who also traveled with the circus, died, and that she then married James Jameson in St. Stephen, N. B., and came with him to Maine. Jameson got a job in a mill at Phillips, and then went into the woods as a pulp wood peeler. Not wanting to separate from his wife, Jameson urged her to wear men's clothes and join the woods crew, which she did, and for some months she worked with the rest, peeling the bark from poplar logs, eating and sleeping in the common camp and learning to smoke and play cards, in order to kill time and be sociable. The work was rather hard, but the only thing she much regretted about the strange life was that she had to cut off her hair.

After some months at this sort of work for which she received the same pay as any of the men, Mrs. Jameson says her husband took her to Livermore Falls, where they both got jobs in a pulp mill. Here he compelled her to work until within a few days of the birth of her child. Then, suddenly, he deserted her, and as soon as she was able she resumed her male garb and went in search of him, finding him in Kingfield, where, after his refusal to make amends for his treatment of her and their child, she asked for his arrest.

Mrs. Jameson says that she is a graduate nurse, and that she served for a year in the Central Maine General Hospital in Lewiston, where her daughter is now studying. Jameson denied that the "bearded lady" is his wife, declaring that he never saw her until two weeks ago in Kingfield, and that he knew her there merely as an agreeable young man.
