MARINE NOTES.

The tern schooner Melba arrived in port yesterday with a cargo of herring from Apalachicola, Florida, after an unusually long passage of thirty days. Mate Schrader had a narrow escape from death during one of the storms. His left sleeve got caught in the shaft of a pump while he was adjusting the machinery. Captain Spongie's prompt action in freeing the mate's arm saved his life.

After a sixteen days trip from Turk's Island with a cargo of salt, the tern schooner W. D. Richard arrived in port yesterday afternoon.

THE ORIGIN OF THE RED CROSS

To Swiss Writer Goes Credit For The Great Idea

SAW BATTLE OF SOLFERINO

Need of Medical and Nursing Corps Impressed Upon Him, he Wrote Book Which Aroused the World

Toronto, June 12.—The story of how the Red Cross societies came into being is little known, and is well worth repeating. They were the result of a book written by Henry Dunant, a Swiss gentleman, who had been present at the battle of Solferino, when the need for an international medical and nursing corps was forcibly brought home to him. His book made a great sensation and was translated into most European languages, with the result that the Geneva Society of Public Utility invited Monsieur Dunant to submit a scheme which would cope with the evil.

M. Dunant suggested that every nation should establish an efficient and voluntary corps of trained doctors, and nurses together with field hospital equipments, which would be guaranteed mutually by contending nations in the time of war. The Geneva Society called a convention of nations sent representatives. The following year (1864) twelve of these nations signed the convention which made neutral all medical service whether rendered by the Army Medical Corps or by voluntary Red Cross Societies, and since that date the scheme has spread so widely that at the present day the only countries that have no Red Cross Societies are China, Mexico and Brazil.

The question of an international badge was raised at the Geneva congress and it was decided to adopt a Red Cross on a white ground, out of compliment to Switzerland, where the idea took shape, and whose flag is a white cross on a red ground. The preliminaries over, all countries began to organize, and the results are seen in the splendid work which is being done today.

Already a large contingent of nurses have left Canada to work under the Red Cross banner in the hospitals in the old land where they will give their time and experience to the great work of attending to our wounded and sick Canadian soldiers. It is a labor of love and Canada should feel honored that such an excellent body of women have given up, in many cases, fine positions, to do their
