BAPTIST WOMEN'S CONVENTION ENDED

Last night's meeting brought the Baptist Women's Missionary Union meeting to a successful close. The attendance has been large. Miss Margaret West last night read a paper on "How To Interest Young Women in Missions." Rev. F. W. Patterson, formerly of this city, but now of Edmonton, Alta., gave an address on Baptist missions in western Canada. Miss Flora Clark of India, related personal experiences as a missionary, and Mrs. W. E. McIntyre, on behalf of the convention, bade farewell to Mrs. Glendinning, who will return soon to her missionary work. A quartet composed of Misses Stammers, Black, Brown and McLean, sang several selections well.

Mrs. Henry Colpitts, and Mrs. A. Shurman, reported success in the baby band work in New Brunswick, P. E. Island and Nova Scotia. Mrs. P. R. Foster gave an interesting paper on Methods in Band Work, while Miss Nora Ghand read a paper on Children and Missions. Sight-seeing in India was the subject of an interesting talk by Mrs. J. Fitzbrook, after which the estimates were passed for the coming year.

McROBBIE KING STREET

La MARQUISE de FONTENOY

Society Papers in London and Some Aristocratic People Who have Published Them at Various Times

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company)

Charles Bateman Hanbury, who as a younger son of the late Lord Bateman is entitled to the prefix of "Honorable" to his Christian name, and is next heir to the Bateman peerage, since the marriage of his elder brother, Lord Bateman to the widow Mrs. Henry Cabot Knapp of New York, daughter of James Jeffrey Graham of that city, has remained without issue, has just undertaken in what is known as "society journalism," by the purchase of the London weekly newspaper entitled "Maidens," an old established organ of that portion of the press which caters more especially to the feminine element.

He is, however, no tyro in journalism. For, some time ago he acquired control of "The Throns," a London illustrated weekly, which has been through the most extraordinary vicissitudes, and has managed to set it on its feet, and to render it a paying concern.

Fortunately he is rich, far more so than his brother Lord Bateman, through the wills of a couple of uncles and has one of the most beautiful Elizabethan country seats in the United Kingdom, Breches Hall, near Attleborough, in Norfolkshire; spending a great deal of money in maintaining its style and character.

The building contains a grand hall, with oak panelling more than 300 years old. The floor is of oak, only partly covered with rug. The numerous bedrooms are in feudal style, there being no paper on the walls, only rugs on the floor. There is no electric light, the whole house being lit with lamps. The gardens are laid out with old world flowers, and the house is so interesting in every way, that both Queen Mary and Queen Alexandra have visited it on several occasions.

A year or so ago, Charles Bateman Hanbury purchased Eye Castle, the old Norman stronghold commanding the town of Eye, in Suffolk, and presented it to the municipality, while his widowed mother, who is also very rich in her own right, organized at her own expense a museum, located in the castle, and filled with interesting relics connected with the history of Eye, which she had collected and purchased for the purpose.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

AN OLD aunt of ours paid us a visit last week, and during her stay told us the following little story about my grandfather which I venture to think worth repeating.

Grandfather's oldest son was in his early youth a ship's carpenter. His first long voyage was to Calcutta. He was gone several months, and when it came time for him to return, grandmother, of course, began to make all sorts of preparations. Days before the ship was due she began to plan how they would all go down to the wharf to meet John, and what they would have for dinner, and all the dear delicious details of his homecoming.

During the planning, grandfather was strangely unenthusiastic. "I wouldn't plan too much, mother," he would urge. "Suppose the ship is late, or something."

Grandmother thought all this very strange, for Grandfather wasn't usually a wet blanket; but she laid it to an un-suspected streak of superstition, and let it go at that.

When the ship was actually sighted in the harbor, grandfather acted even more strangely than before. He didn't want grandmother to lay out the "boiled shirt" she had already made for John, and she wouldn't even let her go to the wharf with him.

So he went alone to meet John. And by and by he came back in a carriage with John in a plaster cast and his young face as white as wax and thin, and then, of course, the whole story came out.

It seemed that some months before, grandfather had gotten word from a vessel which came direct from Calcutta, instead of a roundabout route, as John's ship did. That John's ship was about to sail with all on board except the ship's carpenter, who had had some kind of an accident and had to be left behind. And John was the ship's carpenter.

As a matter of fact, the report had been correct about the accident but not about John's being left behind. He had risen out of bed in the hospital the day the ship sailed and insisted on being taken home.

And all these months grandfather had been bearing that anxiety alone.

All the family asked him why he didn't tell them, and he just said, "What good would it have done? I would have told you if you could have helped; but you wouldn't. It would have made you wroth?"

Do you know, that story is as inspiring to me as a story of real physical heroism.

I felt a new respect for and pride in my grandfather when I heard it. And more than that, a new shame for my own weakness in sharing anxieties.

That is why I have repeated this bit of family history to you.

"What good would it have done?" said grandfather, simply.

What good does it do for any of us to darken someone else's heart with the anxiety that is over-shadowing our own?

TOMORROW AT CATON'S ISLAND

A Big Celebration of Anniversary—The Island and Its History—Some Who Have Been Its Owners

Caton's Island, on which the New Brunswick Historical Society have placed a memorial cairn, surrounded by a tablet recording the fact that the name of the island in 1611 the first white man's settlement in the province, will be tomorrow the scene of a unique gathering. In a young country such as this it is a far cry from 1611 to 1911; from Mervill, the trader of St. John's, leader of the party who founded the first white settlement to James Lovell, the present owner of the island, who is in a position to become a leader in a somewhat different line in the near future.

Its History

The name of the founder of the settlement, Mervill, (which in English means a "wanderer" or "mariner"), seems not inappropriate in view of the curious history of the island. It is a place of many traditions, of many names and many stories. It certainly has a marvellous prospect. The island is a beautiful spot, sheltered by the hills of the mainland from cold winds, is well wooded, has excellent water, a beautiful sand beach and cooves for landing near the site of the ancient settlement. The Indians knew it well of old, and at the time of its discovery it was called by the name of "The Maiden's Isle" but who the maiden was and whether fair or dark, tradition saith not.

To the Maiden's Isle came Brigadier Moncton in 1763, in quest of the fugitive Acadians he was chasing up the river, whose villages he burned as he proceeded. He describes the island as a very fine one, the wood oak, beech, birch and butternut. These trees are found there still. The French retired about St. John's three years later the pioneer English settlers appeared.

One of these, a Captain Isaac Caton from Philadelphia, was ambitious to follow the example of Capt. Mervill a century and a half before. In 1763 he obtained a license from Governor Montague Wilnot at Halifax and engaged in trading with the Indians. Some of his supplies he purchased from St. John's first merchants, the firm of Simonds & White, at Port-au-Prince. He did not stay long but bequeathed his name to the island.

The close of the American Revolution brought to the River St. John a large number of Loyalists. Among those who landed on the 18th of May was Ebenezer Foster, a New Jersey man, one of the judges of the inferior court, who like many another had been banished on account of his loyalty to the crown. He came up the River in quest of a desirable location and selected the group of islands below Oak Point. He made improvements upon all of them but lived on the upper one since called Foster's Island (or Isle of Pine).

He says that at this time the three islands were called Cherry Island, Isle Tranche and Caton's Island. Mr. Foster and General John Coffin were the first members for Kings county in the provincial legislature. Later owners of Caton's Is-

MORNING NEWS OVER THE WIRE

Andrew Jagerschmidt, a Parisian newspaperman and globe trotter, reached Montreal yesterday on what is expected to be a record trip. He left Paris thirty days ago, and expects to be back by Friday next, completing the tour of the world in thirty-nine days. He is vis-à-vis ahead of his schedule.

A mother and her two little children were found dead in their home at Lion Head, Ontario, yesterday. The mother, who is thought to have been demented, had strangled the two little ones, a boy and a girl, and had then hanged herself in the kitchen.

Miss Janet Crowhurst, of Brighton, England, has been appointed assistant teacher in vocal culture at Mount Allison.
