It is certain that the depression will continue until the population (increasing annually at the rate of about 10,000 a year) fill up the unlet buildings, and until the advent of a general revival in trade."

The same proportionate decrease in building operations has taken place all over the United Kingdom, while the wood market has been receiving supplies at an almost corresponding rate of crease. The ruinously low prices ruling at forced sales have induced buyers to reduce the stocks held by the handlers and it will take a longer time and distributed all over the country to that the greatest caution is necessary
