"The Black Watch."

The 42nd regiment of Royal Highlanders, known as the "Black Watch" on account of the sombre appearance of their d wonders why her Jennie and the cow tartan uniform, as compared with the red coats of the majority of the soldiers of the British regulars, left Edinburgh castle on the 7th instant for Egypt. The conduct of the men was most exemplary, and instead of being confined to barracks, as is usual prior to leaving, they were permitted to mingle with their friends in the city and in no way did they abuse this con fidence of their colonel. At roll call every man responded and not a soldier was under the influence of liquor. All along the line of march the streets were densely crowded, and when they reached the railway station the cheers with which they were greeted showed that the "Black Watch" is a popular regiment in the Mr. Gladstone, in his speech at the northern capital.

About Talking

A child brought up with Germans will talk German; with French, French; with "The great question of the military English, English; with the Italians, expedition to Egypt, which has been touched by two Ministers of the Crown in their speeches of to-night, is indeed a matter of deep interest to us and to a matter of deep interest to us and to the world at large, and one upon which it is of vital importance that the position of this country should not be misunderstood. My Lord Mayor, it is true we have gone to Egypt with the forces of this country, in prosecution of the great interests of the Empire, which it is our duty to cherish and defend. (Cheers.) Unless those interests had existed it would not have been possible for us to find any justification for the intervention we have on hand. But, my lord, let it be well known and proclaimed from this spot, which affords a channel of communication to the civilized world, not inferior to the Senate itself—let it be well known and underticed. To be able to speak easily itself-let it be well known and under- conversation. To be able to speak easily stood that those interests, though they be ours, are not ours alone, but they be ours, are not ours alone, but they power. If there are young men who wish are interests common to us with every State in Europe, nay, with the whole civilized world. (Cheers.) Egypt has now become a great gate between the Eastern and the Western hemispheres. They will soon come to excel Eastern and the Western hemispheres.

The commerce of the world depends those who laugh at them. Attend religiupon the passage through that gate more than upon any other single point that can be marked upon the surface of that can be marked upon the surface of the globe. It is essential for the industry and enterprise of mankind that that gate should be open, and in order that it may be open it is not less essential that the country in which it is set where the country in which it is set where the country in which it is set where the country under peaceful and the can be marked upon the surface of your ideas on as great variety of subjects as possible.
