Geo. H.I., who was on the hrone for filty sine years, and who died at the ripe old age of 85, had no less than five distinct attacks of in antity. The first attack showed itself in 1765, after he had been on the throne for five years, when he was only 27 years of age. From this period until 1810 he had ralpases, amounting to five attacks in all. He made, apparently, complete recoveries from all these except his control of the complete recoveries from all these except his control of the complete recoveries from all these except his control. These periodical statects of massity were attached to the remains of the size were also retained, and the second of the complete recovering the complete recovering

The king himself did not, after his convalescense, regard the restraint system as harsh; for one day walking through the palace, after his recovery from one of his attacks, he remarked:—"It is the best friend I ever had in my life," alluding to a strait waistcoat, which had not been put away. In 1788, during his second attack, in consequence of its length and the questions before Parliament being of the most vital importance in their issue, it was found necessary to draw the attention of Parliament to the desirability of providing a regency to manage the state affairs. It was universally agreed that the Prince of Wales should act as regent. There were, however, dissensions between the Whigs and Tories as to what powers he should assume in his regency.

A committee of the House was appointed to examine the physicians, the reports of such examination being laid on the table. A few days after this committee sat the following questions were submitted to the physicians: "Is his Majesty incapable by reason of the present date of his hadle he fewconing to narrive to a strait state of his hadle he fewconing to narrive to a strait such that of his hadle he fewconing to narrive to a strait waistons were submitted to the physicians; the reports of such examine the physicians; "Is a month of pain is saved.

A few days after this committee sat the following questions were submitted to the physicians: "In this Majesty incapable by reason of the present state of this health of woming to puliament or of attending to public business are assessed on this of the control of the disorder in general; Can you, case or your experience of the disorder in general; Can you, cassign any cause for his illness? Do you seamy signs of convalescence? The answers were not on the whole satisfactory, except the one relating to the probability of secorety, which was answered in the affirmative.

The King did recover, but only to have further relapse, and during this time all public business was at a standard. Lord of the Lord Conse held personally responsible for many of the strange actions performed by His Majesty during his mental derangement. This state of affairs wend on until the time of his last seizure in 1812, though at times even the taking deep interest in politics, he was generally completely mentally incapacitated. He was dead, and one day remarked; "I mush have a suit of black in memory of George III., for whom I know there is a general mourning." He talked to imaginary individuals, his memory of complete blank, especially for event events. Toward the end 50.0 was appetts and the control of the con the elephant, who went to a neighboring village.

There he chased an old man into a house, the broke down the walls, pulled the man out and dashed him into pieces. The same night the elephant knocked down saveral houses in quest of human beings in the villages of Sadarpur, Baragon and Jaisingpur. He killed six men in Bersoma, three in Sota, four in Gangeo, and four in Mardan. He likewise killed a bullock and a pony, and also completely destroyed a new carriage. The animal used to stand at the door of a house, force his entry by demolishing the walls on oither side, and would then kill as many of the immates as he could, parsuing others who tried to run away. He mangled the corpses terribly.

So light my pursuine seems to taunt Me with hot curies as a statisfied.— tried to run away. He mangled the corpses terribly.

After securing a victim he sometimes returned to the spot to see if life was extinct, and would commence mutilating the body afresh. He carried several bodies long distances and threw them into the ravine, etc. The elephant found his way to the Dehra Rajah's place, where he tried to enter the house of a gardener; but some men, mounted on three elephants, assisted by spearmen, drove him off. He then returned to Bebipur, where he tried to break down his master's house, in which several persons had taken refuge. The police got into the house from a back window, and were obliged to send for help to the Dehra Rajah, who sent three elephants and some spearmen. The animal received two gunshots on the head at Bebipur, which, knowever, only temporarily drove him off. He was ultimately captured, at imminent risk, by the Rajah's three elephants and men.

And its hundreds of hurrying feet? No person should go from home without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial in their possession, as change of water, cooking, climate, etc., frequently brings on summer complaint, and there is nothing like being ready with a sure remedy athand, which oftentimes saves great suffering, and frequently valuable lives. This Cordial has gained for itself a wide-spread reputation for affording prompt relief from all summer complaints.
