Flags fly low for dead prof

HAMILTON, ONT.—Flags were at half mast at McMaster University last week as students and staff gathered at the memorial service for Professor Edith Wightman.

Prof. Wightman's body was discovered in her office last month. She was found handcuffed with tape over her hands and mouth and she had choked to death.

Prof. Wightman had taught in the history department for more than 12 years and was considered a world-renowned scholar in ancient Roman history.

Across the university campus posters are on display showing a police sketch of a transvestite being sought for questioning. The suspect is described to be 188 cm. tall (6'2"), 45-years-old and wearing a woman's dress.

According to a Globe and Mail article, McMaster President Alvin Lee had said, "Her death shocked and saddened us all. Our University is much the poorer through her loss."

In the same article Bev Eybelmisch, a volunteer at the women's centre said, "It seems that it was a random attack and therefore it could have happened to anyone. The thing that frightens me most is that it happened in broad daylight." This seems to have shaken students on the campus.

To help complete Prof. Wightman's work the University will establish a memorial fund to help complete her works on archaeological digs in Tunisia and Italy.

Radio station goes on the air

After 13 years, thousands of dollars and countless man hours CJAM-FM (91.5) is officially on the FM dial. The move to FM effectively solves CJAM's problem of lack of presence on campus. "It's a positive step for the whole university," said student council president David Laird.

The station will offer four hours a week of community access programming that is available to student groups, university sports coverage, a phone-in talk show, and local news.

The station will concentrate its efforts on building its listenership with the focus on getting better.
