Bridge

Fred Karpin

Maxim Litvinov, Soviet foreign secretary before World War II, once told this story of a bridge game in Washington, where he served as ambassador.

"I had just bid a small slam," he reminisced, "and had put my hand down as the dummy when the telephone rang. The message recalled me to Moscow at once. I dashed upstairs, packed a bag . . ."

"But how did the slam come out?" he was asked. (After all, slam results are important).

"I never stopped to find out," Litvinov replied.
"Maxim Maximovitch," said one of the listeners, "you will never make a good bridge player."

In today's deal, Litvinov, if he had the time, would have derived much enjoyment watching South's play of a small slam contract. Both sides vulnerable.

West's club opening was captured by East's ace, and a club was returned, South's king winning. If one were to take a cursory look at all four hands, it would appear that the slam contract was un-makable. If South attempts to ruff out his fourth spade, East will trump the third lead of that suit. And if South picks up East's four trumps, he will eventually lose a spade trick to West. But South fulfilled his contract with no strain by employing the expert "dummy-reversal" play. At trick three, he cashed the ace of trumps, West discarding a club. Next came the king of diamonds, after which the diamend ten was led to the board's ace. This was followed by a third diamond lead, South ruffing.

A spade was now led to dummy's king, and the board's last diamond was ruffed in the closed hand. The queen of trumps was then cashed, and the jack of trumps was led next and overtaken by dummy's king. The ten of trumps then picked up East's last trump. The last two tricks were taken by South's ace and queen of spades.

All in all, declarer made three spade tricks, two diamonds, and one club, plus six trump tricks (two trump tricks were made by ruffing diamonds, another with the ace of hearts, a fourth with the queen of hearts, and the fifth and sixth with the board's king and ten of trumps).

agreed, it was a neat exhibition of expertise by our South declarer.
