There was considerable dissatisfaction with the working of these courts especially among the mercantice community; and it was with a view to ascertain whether that dissatisfaction was owing to the character of the courts themselves, or to the fact that the officials of them were unscripulous and dishonest without entering into debate upon the point. He was inclined to think that it was owing to a want of goper supervision over the clerks of these courts—officials who had practised the most bare-faced imposition in regard to their fees, and had turned the courts into shaving shops instead of places where igustice was to be obtained. Rather than that the state of things should be better that the power to collect debts under $10 should be withdrawn from the people aitogether. He desired that a subject, in order that a selection of the Government should be called to this subject, in order that a which now existed, it would be better that the power to collect debts under $10 should be withdrawn from the people attogether.
