

MANN NO MORE.

Penitent and confident in the hereafter—He Explains His Awful Crime—The Murderer of the Cook Family—Calms His Fate.

L'Original, Oct. 12.—This little village has been greatly agitated all this week over the intended execution of Frederick Mann, the murderer of the Cook family at Little Rideau on Jan. 2nd, last. This morning the excitement reached its climax, and by to-morrow people will have resumed their normal state of mind.

It was engaged three men to act as executioners, so that if one or two backed out, he would have a third to do the deed. The Rev. Mr. Phillips, who has attended to Mann's spiritual wants ever since sentence was passed, was with him at the last trying moment, and took part in the melancholy procession to the scaffold, which was headed by Sheriff Merrick.

Mann preserved a calmness of spirit, and ascended the steps with a strength of purpose and nerve that is rarely witnessed by mortals in passing through such a trying ordeal. He stepped upon the fatal trap door with firmness, carefully inspected the pining of his legs, wore a cheerful smile, said "good-bye to his attendants, and dropped into the everlasting, after an impressive prayer had been offered-up by the Anglican minister.

The following is a list of some American geographical names, with their derivation, which will doubtless be interesting. It would be a good plan for school children to cut it out and preserve for future reference.

America, named after Amerigo Vespucci who, in 1497, landed upon the continent, south of the equator. Arizona, sand hills. Bermuda, named after Juan Bernoudez, the Spanish discoverer.

Canada, a collection of huts. Cayuga, a long lake. Chicago, a French form of an Indian word signifying a skunk; also, a wild onion, from its strong and disagreeable odor.

Chili, land of snow. Colorado, red or colored. Columbia, named after Christopher Columbus. Detroit, named from the river or strait on which it is built.

Ecuador, equator, so named from its position under the line. Erie, wild cat, the name of a fierce tribe exterminated by the Iroquois. Iowa, the French form of an Indian word signifying "the droxy" or the "sleepy ones," a Sioux name of the Pahoya or "Gray-nose" tribe.

Kansas, smoky water; also said to signify good potato. Kentucky, at the head of a river. Labrador, named by the Spaniards Terra Labrador, "the white land," to distinguish it from Greenland.

Manitowin, spirit islands. Michigan, a weir for fish. Milwaukee, rich land. Mississippi, great and long river. Missouri, muddy.

Montreal, Royal Mountain—so named by the French explorer, Jacques Cartier, 1534-35. Newfoundland, so named by its discoverer, John Cabot, in 1497, first applied to all the territory discovered by him, but afterward restricted to the island to which it is now applied.

New York, named after the Duke of York, afterwards James II. Niagara, neck of water—connecting Lake Erie with Lake Ontario. Nova Scotia, New Scotland. Ohio, beautiful.

Ontario, from Onontio, "a village on a mountain," the chief-son of the Onondagas. Oregon, named by Carver, Oregon or Oregon, i. e., River of the West. Ottawa, traders.

Quebec, an Algonquin term, meaning "take care of the rock." Saskatchewan, swift current. Toronto, an Iroquois term denoting oak trees rising from the lake. Vancouver Island, named after Vancouver, who visited the island in 1792. Winnipeg, turbid water.

Nervousness in Speaking.

A youthful speaker, nervous at the prospect of addressing a literary society on its anniversary, was advised by a clergyman to look upon the audience as if it were so many cabbage-heads. The suggestion was not a bad one, provided the youth had thoroughly prepared his speech for heads with brains. The young man, though he did not know it, held in that nervousness at least one claim to a place among orators. For there is scarcely a speaker whose words move men who does not feel a similar tremor every time he rises before a great audience.

"My throat and lips" said the late Lord Derby, surmamed the "Rupert of debate," from his dashing, fearless style, "when I am going to speak are as dry as those of a man who is going to be hanged."

Mr. Matthews, in his essay on 'The Orator's Trials,' has collected a number of cases to illustrate the fact that the very sensibility which gives the orator his power makes him nervously anxious before rising to address an audience.

Patrick Henry usually began with a hesitating timidity, which continued until the excitement of speaking threw off. When Pinkney, a haughty, defiant and venemous orator, would turn pale when about to speak, and his knees would tremble as if he were Belshazzar gazing at the mysterious hand writing on the wall. Even years of practice failed to repress this nervousness.

It is fortunate for the orator that years do not do this. For without the sensibility which begets it one of the forces of oratory would be wanting.

Tristram Burgess, the bald eagle of Rhode Island, while speaking on some important question in the House of Representatives, suddenly pointed his forefinger towards his opponent and made a long pause.

"That pause was terrible," said a colleague to Mr. Burgess, on leaving the House. "To no one so terrible as to me," replied the orator, "for I couldn't think of anything to say."

"Nothing but strong excitement and a great occasion," wrote Lord Macaulay, while he was looked upon as one of the orators of the House of Commons, "over came a certain reserve and scientific habit (bashfulness) which I have in speaking; not a nervous habit which in the least confuses me or makes me hesitate for a word, but which keeps me from putting any fervor into my tone or action."

Dr. Storrs, the most finished of pulpit orators, whose extempore sermons are marvels of rhetoric, though in consequence, it is said made a dead failure when he first preached without notes. After floundering for twenty-five minutes he came to a full stop.

"I sank back in the chair," he said, describing his mortification, "almost wishing that I had been with Pharaoh and his hosts when the Red Sea went over them."

"My Lords," said the Earl of Rochester, as he began a speech in the House of Lords, "I—I—I rise this time—my lords, I—I divide my discourse into four branches. My lords, if ever I rise again in this house, I give you leave to cut me off root and branch, forever."

The lesson taught by these incidents is this: The orator should master, but not eradicate, his nervousness. Canning, one of England's wittiest and most classical orators, used to say he was aware of speaking his best if he rose in a fright. The more his heart beat, the more certain he was that the heart of the audience would soon beat in responsive sympathetic rhythm.—[Youth's Companion.]

In the late elections just held in Ohio and Iowa the liquor question was pushed prominently to the front. The women took up the cause of prohibition and made an active canvass in favour of it. They seem to have made headway. But the result to the Republicans of adopting the prohibition plank has been to lose them the support of the Germans. The Germans are a peaceful and law-abiding class of the community, but they dearly love their beer. They went over to the Democrats, and the result has been a Democratic victory. As is usual in cases in which one side is fighting simply for what it believes to be right and the other is fighting for its bread and butter nothing was left undone by the latter side to ensure victory. Money was freely spent. This is where the liquor interest always has the advantage. It is a question of life and death with it, as it is known that if prohibition were carried it would have to close its bars.

The unseating of Sir John Macdonald in Lennox, on the ground of bribery by agents will make no difference as far as he is concerned. He was elected for two constituencies, and now that he has been deprived of one, can fall back upon the other. Lennox having shown him the door, Carleton still stands with open arms and will be delighted to have him all to herself. Up to the present, Carleton and Lennox were represented by half a man each, but no doubt they agreed that it was better to be represented by half a man like Sir John Macdonald than by a whole man of less ability and brain. It is a pity that he was not born twin, as then they could each have had one of him.—[Toronto Telegram.]

How a Feather Grows.

In the skin of a fowl, where a feather is to appear, there is to be seen a little pit, and in the bottom of this rises a little mound or pyramid. Around this pyramid certain little grooves extend from the base and seeming to radiate from one large groove at one side—all growing shallower, and finally disappearing at the top. This whole pyramid is covered with a skin composed of the same scales, or flattened cells, as those which cover the whole body. In the ordinary process of growth the new formations on the surface of the body throw off, as effete matter, the older portions of the skin; but here they are retained, and become so closely united to each other that they form a sort of horny coat more or less strong (according to its age), over the surface of the pyramid. As new cells grow at the base they push up this little horny protuberance till it breaks at its thinnest point, which is opposite the large groove. Then as new growths still push it onward and flatten it, it assumes the form of a feather, the ridge in the middle the side grooves being the separate barbs of the vein. When all this web of the feather is completed the pyramid loses its grooves and becomes smooth. All parts are of equal thickness, and so hard as not to break easily, but remain tubular and firm, the quill is thus fashioned to what remains of the pyramid. The finger nails, and even single hairs are developed and formed in the same way; and every one who has injured a nail and lost it knows by how long a process—some three or four months—the missing finish to his digit is being reproduced.

To Make a Happy Home.

- 1. Learn to govern yourself, and to be gentle and patient. 2. Guard your tempers, especially in seasons of ill-health, irritation and trouble, and soften them by prayers, and a sense of your own shortcomings and errors. 3. Never speak or act in anger until you have prayed over your words or acts, and concluded that Christ would have done so in your place. 4. Remember that, valuable as is the gift of speech, silence is often much more valuable. 5. Do not expect too much from others, but remember that all have an evil nature, whose development we must expect, and which we should forbear and forgive, as we often desire forbearance and forgiveness ourselves. 6. Never retort a sharp or angry word. It is the second word that makes the quarrel. 7. Beware of the first disagreement. 8. Learn to speak in a gentle tone of voice. 9. Learn to say kind and pleasant things whenever an opportunity offers. 10. Study the character of each, and sympathize with all in their troubles, however small. 11. Do not neglect little things, if they can affect the comfort of others in the smallest degree. 12. Avoid moods and pets, and fits of sulkiness. 13. Learn to deny yourself, and to prefer others. 14. Beware of meddlers and tale-bearers. 15. Never charge a bad motive, if a good one is conceivable. 16. Be gentle but firm with children. 17. Do not allow your children to be away from home at night without knowing where they are at the same time. 18. Do not allow them to go where they please on the Sabbath. 19. Do not furnish them with much spending money. 20. Remember the grave, the judgment seat, and the scenes of eternity, and so order your home on earth that you shall have a home in heaven.—[Pres. Chronicle.]

Aphorisms for the Dyspeptic.

In the third edition of his treatise on indigestion, Dr. John B. Gill, of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, gives the aphorisms for the dyspeptic, to learn by heart: Let each man take that which he finds, by experience, to suit him—not his neighbor; carefully distinguish between natural tastes and acquired bad habits.

One man's meat is another man's poison. Eat your loaf before you eat it. Always rise from the table unsatiated. Stimulation must be followed by depression. Live peacefully with all men. Eat slowly. After dinner sit awhile, after supper walk a mile. Eat when you are hungry, not when it is meal time. Eat only such a quantity that you shall be hungry when meal time comes round. Let your food be proportionate to your work. Be temperate in all things. Nature loves regularity. Dr. Diet is the best physician. It is not good for a man to be alone. Idleness is the stomach's hangman.

Some one has taken the trouble to ascertain how far a farmer must walk to put in and tend forty acres of corn. To plough the ground with a sixteen-inch three-horse plough he travels 350 miles; to harrow the ground thoroughly before planting he will have to travel 100 miles; to cultivate the same he travels fifty miles; to cultivate it three times he will have to travel 150 miles—making a total of 600 hundred miles besides the gathering.
