As your correspondent passed through this district last August he was led to think there was nothing in the world like winter The harvest was then on, and the grain stood as thick in the fields as a porcupine's quills. The wheat that was rushed to these same elevators or shipped direct to the lake ports was winter wheat. spring wheat stood green in the fields and was rather slow in ripening. The farmer became dubious. He saw his winter wheat yielding from forty to fifty bushels to the acre, and he concluded that spring wheat was too much of a gamble. He decided that he would sow more winter wheat than Meanwhile the spring wheat grew and ripened. The farmer harvested about 75 per cent. of all the coppe a magnificent crop and turned it on to the market at a good price. farmers held their spring grain until this year and have been drawing it

Perhaps the most striking feature of the report, as it is the one that is bound to meet the most hostile criticism, is that there is no increase in the acreage of land seeded to spring wheat in the Canadian Prairie West. No doubt good grounds exist for that contention, but on the other hand, in mind the large new acreage brought under the plow for the first time as well as the incentive to first time as well as the incentive to ereals by reason of its abnormally high price, it seems there must be a
