Mystery Stories and Detective Novels.

THE AFTER HOUSE—A Mystery Story by Mary Roberts Rinehart. It is a capital story of murder, mystery and love; its pages are full of the spirit of adventure, the buffeting of the gale and the atmosphere of the sea. Price $1.25.

AT 130—A Mystery Detective Story by Isabel Ostrander. A man is found murdered in his study at 1.30 o'clock. Who did it? His brother, his wife and even his mother come within range of suspicion, but owing to the wonderful gift possessed by a blind detective the real murderer is at length detected. Price $1.25.

THE BLUE LIGHTS—A thrilling Detective Novel by Arnold Fredericks. A mystery story of compelling interest. The story is filled with action and moves towards its climax with that cumulative interest that stamps its author as a master of construction. Price $1.25.

CLEEK'S GREATEST RIDDLES—A book of most enjoyable detective stories by T. W. Hanshew. Price $1.25.

THE IVORY SNUFF BOX—By Arnold Fredericks. A book that goes with a rush from the first chapter to the last. Price $1.25.

THE LITTLE FORTUNE—By Arnold Fredericks. "The Little Fortune" may be only a little silver franc piece of the great Napoleon, yet its potency was sufficiently great to cause the death of at least one man, and in the end to engage the attention not only of Richard Duval, the famous American detective, but the secret police of Paris as well. Price $1.25.

THE RED STAIN—By Achmed Abdullah. A story in which murder, mystery and crime prevail. One of the best detective stories ever written. Price $1.25.

The "Gallant Arethusa."

The first "Arethusa" did doughty deeds for France before she was ready to change her flag and allegiance in 1759, the year of Minden, of Quebec, and Wolfe's great triumph at Quebec. Seen off the French coast by a British frigate squadron, under Commander Lockhart, the "Arethusa," as then called was hotly chased for four hours; but only lowered her colours when a second opponent, the "Venus," loosed her broadsides on her. For nearly a score of years the captured "Arethusa" had no opportunity of winning laurels, but in the year 1778, when France and England were on the verge of war, early on the morning of June 17, while Admiral Keppel's fleet was cruising off the Lizard two French frigates and a cutter were suddenly in sight. The signal, "Chase strangers in sight" went up on the British flagship, the "Victory," and at once the "Arethusa," with some of the swiftest of our ships, headed for the enemy. One of the French frigates was quickly overwhelmed, and after a threat of broadsides the French captain went on board the "Victory" to explain to the British Admiral what they were doing in British waters. The other, "La Belle Poule," refused the summons, and with every inch of canvas stretched, showed a swift 'pair of heels' to the Englishmen. All her pursuers were quickly left behind—all save the "Arethusa," whose captain, Samuel Marshall, for two hours hung doggedly on her heels before he last was able to range alongside and hail her. To her captain he made the formal request to put about and return with him to the British fleet. He received an insolent reply, and almost before the last word was spoken the frigates side burst into flame, and a smashing broadside struck the "Arethusa," sweeping her decks and shattering her bulwarks to splinters. The next moment the starboard guns of the "Arethusa" broke into responsive thunder, and strewed the enemy's decks with dead. For four long hours, fast as the guns could be loaded and run out the deadly duel was fought. French and English alike resolute to fight to the last man. When at last after four hours of such fighting as even British sailors had never known, the magazines in each ship were empty, and the last shot fired the wind fell, and the "Arethusa" was left a shattered, motionless wreck on the sea, while "La Belle Poule," although her sails were hanging in ribbons, yet had enough canvas to drift away and struggle into the shelter of a neighboring cove. There she was quickly towed by shore boats to a berth among dangerous reefs, unapproachable without a pilot. The "Arethusa," gallant as she was, could do no more. She could only cut away her wreckage and rig up jury-masts with sufficient sail to drag her back to the British Fleet. But though she took back no prize with her, the story of her heroic fight sent a thrill of exultation and pride through Great Britain, which is still felt a century and a half after she fired the last shot at "La Belle Poule." In four hours she had won immortality, and made the name "Arethusa" the proudest borne by any British man-of-war. That the tradition has been maintained has been proved in latter days.

Woman Insane.

Yesterday afternoon, a report was made to the police that a married woman, resident of the East End, had left her home some hours before and that when leaving she told some of the other inmates that she intended to commit suicide. The police were instructed to make inquiries and did so during the evening and night. About 11 o'clock the woman, having recovered from an evident fit of temporary insanity, returned to her home in an almost exhausted condition.
