The Heir to Beecham Park

CHAPTER XXIV.

Stuart knelt on, while but tears not have been so strong. You have no solemn trust was confided to his care—of what nature he knew not. The no'er-do-well, the wandering nature, the truant from home, had not been alone all his life. The name of "wife" passed from his lips as death closed his eyes. Some tale of sadness, of disappointment, was to come, and with it was linked a name that had destroyed Stuart's joy and youth—the name of "Margery."

A strange thrill ran through the young man's frame when at last he rose from his knees. There was now a bond of sympathy stronger than had ever existed in life between himself and his dead cousin.

"It is not true! I will not believe it! The whole thing is a romance from beginning to end. Douglas Gerant always—"

"Mother, do not forget you are speaking of a dead man," broke in Stuart Crosbie, quietly and sternly. "I will not listen to such words."

Mrs. Crosbie turned and faced her son. Stuart was leaning against the mantelpiece in a room of a London hotel, his face pale, yet determined. Mrs. Crosbie, dressed in heavy black robes half-hidden with crepe, was walking to and fro, vexed and wrathful.

"Do you mean to say you will not dispute this iniquitous will?" she asked, sharply.

"Certainly not. I have no right. It is a most just one."

"And you will let Beecham Park pass from your hands into the clutches of some low-born girl who has no more right to it than a beggar in the street?"

"Except the right of a daughter," "Daughter!" repeated Mrs. Crosbie, with scorn. "There was no marriage, and, even if such was the case, the girl is not to be found; he lost trace of the mother and child for sixteen years, and now has conjured up some romance about a likeness in a village wench."

"Mother, you are not just temperate, Douglas Gerant has set forth in this letter the sorrow of his life. With his dying lips he claimed my promise to fulfill his wishes, and I shall do so."

"You are mad, Stuart!" declared the mother, coldly. "But," she added, with a sneer, "I need not look very far for your motive; it is for the sake of this girl, this Margery Daw, that you are determined to sacrifice everything. Had Sir Douglas seen a resemblance in any other woman, the desire to carry out his wishes might

Four dollars for Carnol did what hundreds of dollars failed to do.

Mr. James Kenny of Ottawa, states very clearly the advantages of Carnol taken for stomach trouble, when he says: "No man or woman can be strong who suffers from stomach trouble and its associated troubles, indigestion and impaired nutrition. When the stomach is weak there is loss of nutrition from food, and food is the source of all physical strength. When a man, woman or child doesn't feel just right, doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach, my advice is to take Carnol and get relief. If nervous or despondent and losing the nutrition to make strength, such a man or woman needs Carnol. It will do for you as it has done for me and many others, restore you to natural health and happiness."

Mr. Kenny then goes on to say, "I have been suffering from a bad case of nervousness and stomach trouble for two years. I suffered so bad that my hands and lips used to swell. I had a bad breath, couldn't eat, couldn't sleep, felt doped all the time. Even my sight failed and I had to pay for teen dollars for glasses in order to continue my daily work. I tried nearly every known medicine and only got relief for a while. I was just about discouraged when a few months ago, health knocked at my door with one of your little books on Carnol. I decided to try a bottle. I bought three more bottles. After taking half of the first bottle my coughing and spitting lessened and bad breath disappeared. I am now on my fourth bottle and feel like a new man. I have thrown off my glasses, have no pains or headaches and can do a day's work with any man. Have a good appetite, eat any old thing and sleep well. Before taking Carnol I was so cross and cranky I could not make any friends. I was called the crank, but now I am always ready for entertainment and fun. Carnol cannot be recommended too highly as I have spent hundreds of dollars on different medicines only getting temporary relief. I gladly say that the four dollars I spent for Carnol was the best investment I ever made."—John Kenny, 158 Isabella Street, Ottawa, Ont.

counts of the estate and curtail the expenses, and went to London.

"From my mother I inherited a small income, which proved about sufficient for my extravagances, and I passed my days with a crowd of boon companions, travelling when and whither I pleased, just as the mood seized me. Among my acquaintances was one whom I held dearer than all, we were bound together by the firmest bond—true friendship. Conway was a handsome fellow, with a reckless, dare-all style that suited my wild nature, and an honest heart; we were inseparable. And next to him in my friendship was a man called Everest, a strong-willed being with a plain face, but having the manners of a Christian, together with a fund of common sense. Everest was a barrier to Conway's and my wildness and to him we owed many lucky escapes. We were with one accord ratters at matrimony, and a very bad time of it any poor fellow had who deserted our ranks to take unto himself a wife. I laughed and bantered like the others, deeming myself invulnerable; yet, when I laughed the loudest, I fell wounded. My rallyer was over, my whole nature changed. The laughter and jokes of my comrades jarred on me; my soul revolted from the lax, useless life I was leading. I grew earnest and grave—I had fallen in love. I had seen a woman who suddenly changed the current of my life.

"Gladys, my angel, my sweet star! She was the niece of one of my mother's old friends. I rarely visited any of the old set, but one day the mood seized me to pay a visit to a Lady Leverick, with whom as a boy I used to be a great favorite; and at her house I saw my darling. What need to tell you all that followed? I haunted the house, unconscious that Lady Leverick grew colder and colder, heedless of all but Gladys's sweet face and glorious eyes.

"At last the dream was dispelled; her aunt spoke to me. Gladys was an orphan under her charge; she was penniless, dependent on her charity, and she would not have so wild, so dissolute a man propose for the girl's hand. I was mad, I think, for I answered angrily; but in the midst of the storm came a gleam of golden light. Gladys entered the room, and in response to her aunt's commands to retire, put out her fair, white hands to me, and leaning her head on my breast, whispered that she loved me, and that nothing would separate us.

"We were married. Lady Leverick refused to see, or even receive a letter from my darling; and my brother Eustace, in lieu of a wedding present, sent a curt note informing me that I was a madman. A madman I was, but my mania was full of joy. Could heaven be fuller of bliss than was my life in those first three months? My income was all we had, but Gladys had had little luxury, and we laughed together over our poverty, resolutely determining to be strictly economical. We took a small house in St. John's Wood, and then began my first real experience of life. I sighed over the money I had wasted, but Gladys never let me sigh twice, and always declared that she would manage everything. Out of all my old friends, I invited only two to our home, Guy Conway and Hugh Everest; but very peppy little remembrance we had.

"We were quite alone, and though Gladys tried over and over again to reinstate herself with her aunt, from affectionate desire only, she failed. Lady Leverick would not see her or own her, and my darling had only me in the wide world.

"How happy I was then! Though Everest's influence, I obtained a co-partnership of a good club, and the addition to our income was most welcome and helpful.

"The months slipped by with incredible swiftness and sweetness till a year was gone and our baby born. All this time Conway and Everest were our beloved and most intimate friends, and Gladys seemed to like them both. We christened the child Margery, but she was to me no earthly being—her beauty and delicacy seemed scarcely mortal. She was like her mother, and both were marvels of loveliness, so much so that Conway, who was a bit of an artist, insisted on painting them in angel forms.

"Have you ever seen a storm gather in a summer sky and in one moment darken the brightness of the sunshine with gray, heavy clouds? (To be continued.)

More Precious Than Gold

Platinum was first found in the Spanish gold mines of Central and South America, but later in larger quantities in the Ural Mountains. At first it was a mere curiosity, which the Indians used for making fish hooks, but when it was discovered to be the only metal upon which no single acid had an effect, it came into use in every chemical laboratory. The only acid that will touch platinum is a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric.

Platinum expands less by heat than any other metal and possesses an extremely high melting point. It does not rust either in air or water, and has a greater power of resistance to electricity.

It is also the heaviest of all substances, with the exception of those very rare metals, osmium and iridium. It has other uses in chemistry as a "catalyzer" or "changer," and is valuable to the photographer for the production of pictures known as platinumotypes.

Forty years ago platinum was much cheaper than gold, for in the early eighties it could be bought for thirty-five shillings an ounce. Then the price began to jump, and by 1899 it was worth £20 an ounce, about five times the price of gold, and was so scarce that our Government commanded all supplies. The reason for the scarcity was that the supply from Russia had ceased, and that almost the only source from which platinum could be obtained was South America.

A little is found in the United States, still less in Australia, but recently Canada has come into the market as a source of supply.

More Plants for Halifax

OTTAWA, Feb. 27.—Construction of a fumigating plant for bulbs and shrubs, and of a frost-proof and heated apple storage shed, both to be located near one of the Halifax shipping piers was discussed to-day at a conference between Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Minister of Agriculture and a delegation which included Hon. R. E. Finlay, member for Halifax; E. A. Saunders, Secretary of the Halifax Board of Trade; E. W. Robinson, member for King's; L. H. Martel, member for Hants, and L. J. Lovett, member for Digby-Annapolis.

After the delegation had pointed out the necessity of suitable storage facilities for the use of apple and bulb shippers, the Minister expressed himself as sympathetic toward the project. When fuller details were prepared, he said, the matter would be further discussed at a conference between the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Railways and Hon. E. M. MacDonald.

HAPPY ENDING.

Long since, before I stirred the household, she was kinder than Santa Claus on Christmas night." And after many years of seeking I tracked her down the other day, and found her ill, her hinges creaking, the poorhouse just a roof away. Oh, what a joy to bring her dishes of tempting trips and wholesome prunes to load her down with leaves and fishes—my heart was singing happy tunes! A burden from that heavy was taken, my wintry days were sweeter made; I felt like one who peace forsaken until that ancient debt was paid.
