THE CRIME FOR WHICH NEILL-CREAM SUFFERED.

The circumstances attending the several suspicious deaths by poisoning in Ontario and elsowhere, including the lamentable end some years ago of the unfortunate young women employed as a domestic in this city—all of which pointed strongly to Neill-Cream as the murderer—have recently been referred to in these columns and are still fresh in the minds of AD VERTISER readers.

At 8:57 Billington, accompanied by an aesistant who carried the pinioning material, entered the cell of the condemned man, where he found the prison chaplain ministering to Neill. Without a moment's delay the hangman, while courteously asking the permission of the condemned man, dettly and rapidly pluioned him, passing a broad belt around his waist and securing his elbows with two straps tightly drawn back and fastened to the belt behind. Straps were placed around the wrists and connected with the bedy belt in front. This rendered Neill absolutely incapable of moving his arms or hands. The condemned man did not wince during the process, which lasted barely a minute. The procession to the gallows was than formed. It was headed by the chief warden, followed by the chaplain, who, as he walked, read the burial service. Neil came next, guarded on each side. He walked firmly. A deadly pallor overspread his reatures, but his face showed no other sign of emotion. Close behind the prisoner walked through the corridors toward the scaffold the tolling of the bell of St. Sepulchre's, which has marked the last moments of so many criminals, resounded throughout the prison.

On arriving at the scaffold the white cap, oently been referred to in these columns and are still fresh in the minds of ADVERTISER readers.

The trial of the prisoner for the last of the long series of crimes committed and for which he has paid the extreme penalty, commenced in London, Eng., on Oct. 17. Sir Charles Russell prosecuted for the Treasury. He said that the prisoner had been indicted for having murdered Matilda Clover on Oct. 21 last, at 27 Lamboth read. From statements made by the prisoner himself, which had been verified by inquiries, it was found that the prisoner's real name was Thomas Neill Cream. He was born in Glasgow in 1850, and was taken by his parents when very young to America, where as a young man he took a degree at the college in Montreal. He after-afterward came back to London, where he attended lectures at St. Thomas' Hospital, with a view of becoming an M. R. C. S., but did not succeed. Subsequently he went to Edinburgh and took two degrees, by which he became a fully qualified medical man. Leaving England sgain, he went to Ontario, and after practicing there for a short time he went to Chicago, where he practiced as Thomas Neill Cream. Passing over the intervening years, at the beginning of October, 1891, the prisoner came back to London and proceeded to Anderton's Hotel, where he stayed on the 6th and 7th of the month. From there he went to live at 103 Lambeth Palace road, until the 6th of the following January, and after-ward went back to America, where he remained until the beginning of April. Returning them to London, he took up his residence again in Lambeth Palace road from April 9 to June 3, when he was arrested on the charge of blackmailing. Sir Charles went on to say that he was in a position to prove that Oct, 9 last year was the first occasion the prisoner met Matilda Clover, and that he was on subsequent oo small empty gelatine capsules. On the night of Oct. 20 a man accompanied Matilda Clover to her ledgings, and she died in great agony on the merning of the long where as he lodged.
