600,000 ANIMALS SLAIN

Losses Mount Up to Millions-Closing Up Forest Reserves Starts Conflict Anew.

Denver, Col., Aug. 5.-At least a lozen men killed, three times that aumber wounded, 600,000 sheep, with an approximate value of $2,400,000 killed, and thousands of dollars' worth of sheep wagons, outfits, ranch buildings and haystacks burned by raiders during the last ten years is a conservative estimate of the cost of the frontier sheep war, which has now broken out again more virulent than ever. Ten thousand sheep have been killed in the last three months. This fiercest and most unique of all frontier vendettas is growing in inensity with each succeeding day, and unless the general government soon takes a hand and enacts laws that will control the public grazing lands and establish the rights of the sheep and cattle men the sheep industry of Southern Wyoming and Northern Colorado will be thoroughly demoralized. Conflicts between cattle and sheep men are becoming more frequent, and the slaughter of sheep and killing of flock tenders are rousing the people to a Atch of fury that will result in a genral outbreak unless some relief comes ANTIPATHY TO SHEEP. This odd conflict of grazing interests by wolves and mountain lions. had its inception in the natural antipathy that cattle have for sheep. This lost 2,000 head the next day. antipathy is so strong that it extends days later Mrs. Irving's ranch even to the land upon which sheep raided. have grazed, and the water, unless it be running, of which they have drunk. Sheep are herded closely, in bodies of 500 to 1,000, and are usually moved slowly in one direction. They nibble off every blade of vegetation so close to the earth that even the roots are destroyed, their feet trample what is left into the earth, and as a result the land over which they have passed is left an almost barren waste, upon which grass will not reappear for several seasons. The odor left behind by the sheep is very offensive to cattle, and the latter would rather starve than feed where sheep have been. For this reason land once used for grazing sheep is useless for cattle for several years afterward.

BROUGHT ABOUT CLASK. When sheep raising on a large scale was first introduced into Wyoming, when that region was almost exclusive-ly devoted to cattle raising, there affairs with a strong hand it will beseemed to be plenty of room for both. Rapidly increasing flocks of sheep and locality. coincident decreasing of open ranges brought about a clash between the two nterests that has never been subdued. The chief causes were the overcro ng of the ranges by sheep, the utter mpossibility, for the reasons given, of running cattle and sheep together, the ruinous effects left by a flock of grazing sheep and the failure of the government to enact satisfactory leasing laws. Add to these the petty jealousies and neighborhood quarrels of the range and you have fuel for a lengthy

There are two figures in this conflict there was no further demonstration, who arouse one's admiration. They are Griff Edwards, now a leading sheep man of Eastern Oregon, the first man to care the cattlemen, and Mrs. Nancy B. Irving, a former Chicago woman, whose goat ranch was recently raided and 1,200 goats slaughtered.

In the years from 1890 to 1895 Edwards was a flock master in Routt county. For three successive years he essayed to graze his sheep on the pub-de range bordering the Colorado line. He disregarded the warnings of the cattlemen and lost his flocks. County

CHICAGO WOMAN'S PLUCK. Mrs. Irving came out here from Chicago about a year ago and established a new industry, the raising of finely bred Angora goats for the manufacture of mohair. The goats were pastured on rocky land that the cattlemen disdained to use. But there were plenty of yucca plants, upon which the goats subsisted well. They did not encroach upon the stockmen's pastures nor interfere with them, but the outlaw raiders swooped down upon this peaceful ommunity, bound and gagged the herder, Lloyd Kellogg, and killed a large portion of the goats. Now Mrs. Irving has placed an armed guard at resist another raid, and has notified District Attorney Mullen at Grand Junction of her act and her intentions. She has also appealed to the humane society for aid, contending that the killing of the goats is cruelty to animals. It is said that she already has several deputies of the humane society among her guard. She pluckily declares that she will resist the raiders

RAIDERS USE DYNAMITE. Cruelty of the most revolting kind has characterized most of these raids. Dynamite has been thrown in among peacefully grazing flocks, killing them by hundreds. In 1895 a flock of 6,000 sheep was driven into a narrow canyon and clubbed to death. A short time later another flock of 4,000 was driven over a precipice and all killed. In 1899 Geddes & Bennett, of Cheyenne, lost a flock of 2,000 in Routt county. In 1900 Southwest Wyoming was the scene of several raids, where human lives were taken. East Liverpool, Ohio, Aug. 5. -Flowers shaped as pieces of pottery lay about the casket of Isaac W. Knowles, the pioneer pottery manufacturer, while the last tribute was paid on Saturday by his pastor in this pottery city on Saurday. It was one of the most remarkable funerals East Liverpool has ever witnessed. Business was suspended by a general agreement of the merchants, while the service was in progress, and until the cortege reached the cemetery. Thirty earthen-ware factories shut down for the afternoon out of respect to his memory. Mr. Knowles was the founder of the Knowles, Taylor & Knowles Company, now the largest and wealthiest earthenware concern in the country. In 1863 without funds he built the one-kiln pottery, which formed the nucleus of the present establishment, using an old blind horse to furnish the power for his machinery for the first two years. He retired four years ago from active business, and died July 23 at his winter home in California. Pottery manufacturers from a dezen cities, from New Jersey to Indiana, at-
