As I took up my book, I saw in the glass at the back of the to the reality, and found-you know what I found."

The coroner's officer nodded, and made some notes. He did not believe a word that Philip had said. The explanation seemed to him to come too glibly, almost as though it had been rehearsed over and over again. He man. forgot that the absolute, unembellished often nothing sounds more like lies than actual facts. Truth being stranger than fletion, it is not wonderful that truth often gets the cold shoulder. "You know the lady, I believe," he "There is a photograph of

"And you do not know how she got into your rooms?"

Jasper looked up. "I don't know whether this sort of explanation is usual," he said, "but I think, were I you, Philip, I should decline to answer these questions."

"Decline?" Philip repeated, while the coroner's officer watched both men. Why, I am anxious the thing should be cleared up."

Jasper shrugged his shoulders. "I can only give my advice," he said. "I can only tell you what I should do under the same circumstances. Least soonest mended; and, of course, in the eyes of those who do not know you, things look queer." "Queer?"

Jasper laughed.
"My dear chap," he said, "are you really so simple as not to know that you will be accused of this That being so, silence is golden. will be accused of this crime?

Philip leant suddenly forward.
"What nonsense!" he said. "I tell you it's three years since I saw her!" "I've not a doubt of it, but who'll believe you? You'll have to prove it, and even then she might have found you out. She might have heard of your engagement, or rather, that you were likely to be engaged, and have felt aggrieved at it: no woman interests a man less than a woman of whose love he has wearied. But with women it is different. Once a man has been her lover, she feels a prospective right in him, and bitterly resents it if he gives his love elsewhere. Men are only jealour when they love; women jealous when they have loved-one might almost say that women are jealous with regard to any man who has paid them anything beyond the most trivial attention.'

then laughed again. "Oh, so you want to bring me into it now, do you?" he asked. "I—no; I never saw her in my life. My cousin will bear me out in that, if you doubt my word."

The elastic band snapped over the notebook of the coroner's officer.
"I won't trouble your cousin," he answered; "but I think"—speaking, perhaps, a trifle spitefully-"we will send you also a summons for the inquest.'

CHAPTER XI The officer rose from his chair, bowed nd left the room as he spoke Jasper shrugged his shoulders once

"What a temper!" he said. "More like a woman's than a man's. What will you do about Leslie, Philip-give her up? Philip looked at him a little blankly.

"Give her up? Of course not. Why should I give her up?" Jasper took the stopper out of the brandy decanter, and poured some into Philip shuddered a little; it seemed so ho rible to him to hear the bright, beautiful girl whom he had known and loved with his first boyish adoration, called a body.

He paused a moment,
"Have you made any discovery?" he asked. "Have you any clue to the murderer?" The man looked at him a little stead-

'Couldn't say," he answered: "twould be rather quick work if we had, wouldn't it? But you'll learn all about that at the inquest." "Yes, of course," Philip returned, and went on upstairs.

The door of his lobby stood open. His heart beating a little quickly, he strode through to his sitting room. The whole of the furniture seemed to have been disarranged, probably when the police made their search; a dark patch on the hearthrug made him sudder.

He noticed that the photograph of Carline had been removed, and the curious old-fashioned dagger which had dealt the fatal blow; but, though every other place had been turned out, nothing else seemed to be missing. He sat down and thought for a moment, then he re-entered his bedroom, and made a careful toilet. He must go and see Leslie, break to her this horrible thing which had happened in his rooms, before she read it in the papers.

When he left the house he knew that he was followed, and though it gave him for a minute a sort of shock, he did not really mind. A guilty man looks round for a policeman with much the same fear of him that a field mouse has of an owl when he makes a night forage; an innocent man, having no cause for fear, feels nothing more than

STIFF FIGHT BETWEEN ST. JOHN'S AND WATFORD

Former Team Won by a Score struggled to get free, but found that they were "caught in the web" with a vengeance. Their helpless condition of 4 Goals to 3.

No Senior City League Games This Week-The Big Races.

By Way of Comment.

London has a large representation among outside hockey teams, those in Toronto being especially numerous. As in other branches of sport they play the game well. In the Toronto teams, several of the local boys are among the best players on the teams. "Chuck" Garratt, who went to Toronto a couple of years ago, has been playing on the druggists' team in that city. He was hurt in a game on Thursday and compelled to retire for a few days. He is visiting at his home in this city at present. Fred Burns is a member the Dominion Express Company's team and is doing fine work. E. W. Dawson, Tom Johnson and Harry McElheran are playing in the Wholesale League, while Frank Webb, who is well known in this play on a team.

Struthers filled the position of president of the London Rugby football team, has won for him the admiration of all who were associated with him this year. The office of president s usually a rather inactive one, but this season Mr. Struthers worked with such vigor that the club easily supported itself. He devoted a great deal of his time to looking after the interests of the club, and his services were properly appreciated. Mr. Struthers has shown that he is a true lover of sport as it should be conducted, and is deserving of the thanks of every football enthusiast in the city.

HOCKEY.

ST. JOHN'S WON. After one of the most interesting games of hockey of the season, St. John's O. H. A. team won over the Watford O. H. A. seven by a score of to 3, last night. It can be safely said that at no game yet played here have the opposing teams been so well matched, both in point of size and weight. Interest lagged at no time, and the playing was one continual series of hard and close checking and exciting rushes. All the players were model stick-handlers, and where the St. John's showed their superiority was in more combined work and in following up and keeping close to the rubber. There was much more combination than in previous games, each team scoring one from start to finish, and w their goals by the aid of clever team nessed by about 100 specta.ors.

The puck was faced off at 9:15, and it was but a matter of a few minutes before the locals had scored. The play was exceptionally close, each forward marking his man determinedly, and the defense men doing good checking. Hodgens, the point of the Watfords, was the fastest man on their team. played the position as it should be played, and if he had not played, the story of the game would be different. Their forward line is fast, though not as fast as the St. John's, who can skate better and do more effective checking. In this line McGuffin is especially bril-When he went after a man it was seldom that he did not secure the puck. McMahen's and the Woolley brothers' work was also of a high order. Both the Woolleys and McMahen acquitted themselves exceptionally well, while Little, at cover point, played a clumsy but became improved in the second half. Johns had unusually hard work, and did quite as good as when he helped London to win trophies. The other goal-keeper received much protection from Hodgens. Dunlop, the cover, might have done better than he did. Hodgens invariably did the de-fense checking, the St. John's appearing to be able to pass Dunlop without much difficulty. The Roche brothers, and, in fact, the whole Watford forward line, played a fine game. At half several goals were scored with rapidity at the start of the second and things looked very interesting. The Watfords scored three goals to the Saints' two tying the score and it was Saints' two, tying the score, and it was not until near the close of the game, when Tom Woolley scored, that the anxiety of the local spectators was relieved. Rather 2 humorous episode oc-curred in this half. Woolley and the other St. John's forwards were making a combination rush on the Watford goal, when Woolley, unable to check his speed, ran with force into the goal, knocking the keeper down. The goals are backed with cord netting and the skates of both players became entan-gled in this. For a few moments they caused the game to be stopped until they were extricated. Archie McMahen received a severe cut over the eye, but was not disabled. One of the Watford men was put off the ice for raising his stick above his shoulder, and several times players were set down for rough Mr. Jack McNee did the refereeing in an entirely satisfactory manner. The line-up was as follows: Watford—Goal, Ward; point, Rodg-ers; cover point, Dunlop; forwards, F. Roche, C. Roche, Clair, Reed.

St. John's-Goal, Johns; point, Mortimore; cover point, Little; forwards, McGuffin, McMahen, T. Woolley, W. Woolley.

We don't cook our food from mere habit; we cook it to release its strength and nutriment, so that (1) it can be digested. The food that releases most strength with least cooking is therefore the most valuable. There are foods which can be cooked in less time than Quaker Oats, but they do not give so much good [[to the body, even in proportion to the time it takes to prepare them. There are many foods, too, that must be cooked longer than Quakeroats but there is no food that gives so much strength and so much flesh, blood and bone, either with short cooking or long cooking, as Quaker Oats gives when it is cooked twenty minutes. Quaker
