woman. She had heard that he had written affectionately to the young woman to whom he was engaged before Nina fastened her affections upon him, and whom, it is said, he still loves better than his erratic proxy wife. Spies is said to have told Nina with much spirit that he would write to whomsoever he pleased, which there was a great upheaval of tears and sobs. The Anarchist's heart softened then, and Spies promised to leave his former love alone. Sudden Beath of an ex-Governor.
