A Gentleman.

The horse-jumped at a young man who was jumping on the platform.

'Have a pipe, Reginald, please.'

'I'll take a pipe, and one of your school-boys.'

'Oh, Reginald, said another. 'From such a little monster!'

An old gentleman who was reading glanced up from his pamphlet. The new-boy was a dwarf, and a hunchback. His face, which was bent back on his shoulders, twisted suddenly at the girl's words, but he did not look toward her, and he went on reading.

'It makes me sick,' she said, with a look of disgust. 'The conductor ought not to allow him to come on board.'

The boy turned and looked at her steadily. Everybody on the car expected a torrent of abuse, but he said, gently, 'This horse was not here, the people on the car would not appreciate the beauty of her real value, and then bowing to her, he went out, amid the smiles of all the passengers.

The old gentleman—who was the well-known physician, Dr. Avery—followed him, and he was already out of sight.

'Who is that boy?' he asked the conductor.

'His name's Willy, and his route is on this street. I don't know anything more of him. He has an educated voice, and he is a good-looking fellow and seems just now.'

'No doubt. The other news-boys call him "Gentleman Bill." Everybody likes him. We conducted him to the front of the car on this street.'

A few days afterwards, Dr. Avery was on a car late in the evening, when Willy came hurrying a large bundle of papers. He held up the bundle and went on, looking discomfited and anxious.

Dr. Avery stopped him, drew out a paper, and handing him a piece of silver, said, 'Never mind the change.'

'No, thank you,' said the boy, smiling, as he gave it to him.

'Why not, young independence?'

'I don't need it, sir. I really get on very well. And if I did, I don't want to take it.'

'It would be the hardest thing I ever had to do. Good-evening, sir,' and bowing his cap the little hunch-back went on his little feet.

Dr. Avery after that often met the boy, who passed and interested him. There was nothing morbid in him; he was always ready with a laugh or a merry word. His voice was controlled and gentle, and there was a fine courtesy, a tact, a delicate feeling, in all his words, that we do not find sometimes in those who call at the doctor's office. In spite of the boy's wretched clothes and patched shoes, Dr. Avery found himself talking to him as to an equal, and always thought of him as his little friend.

One night, when it was storming heavily, he met him, trudging down Chestnut street.

'You have a hand here, my boy,' he said, kindly.

'Not to hard as you think, sir,' he said, cheerfully. 'I am never sick an hour. Then I do a better business than other boys because of this,' glancing down at his deformed body.

'Oh!'

The doctor was confused for a minute. 'Here you any place, Willy? Do you ever look forward?'

'Yes, Oh, I have it all planned out! If I could save enough to start a street-vendor of books and papers, then after a year or two I would be able to open a shop, and then a big store. Some men who began that way in Philadelphia have become publishers, and live in beautiful houses.'

'Hillo! Do you care for fine houses?'

'No, for myself, sir.'

'He became suddenly silent, and at the corner of the next street said, 'Good-night!' and ran away.

A moment later, Dr. Avery heard a loud knock in the direction of Willy's shop, but such things are common in a great city. He hurried home.

The next morning, looking over the papers, he read:

'A little hunch-back news-boy, known as "Gentleman Willy," was knocked down by a runaway horse last night. Dr. Johns pronounced the injuries mortal. The lad was taken to the Fran Hospital.'

Dr. Avery was soon beside the cot on which the misshapen little boy lay.

Willy looked up, trying to smile. 'It is not so bad as they say, is it? I can't die now. I have too much to do.'

'What have you to do, my boy? Let me see your friend; let me help you, if I can.'

'I thought you would come, maybe. I haven't anybody to come. The boys are good friends, but they couldn't do anything now.'

'I have come, you see. Tell me what I can do, my boy.'

The lad waited until the nurse had passed his cot, and then whispered:

'It's Letty, sir. She is my sister. I have her out with a farmer's wife near Meads. She goes to school there. It takes all I can make to pay her board and buy her clothes. I like to see her look nice. She's tired because of wandering, and he began to mutter at intervals.

'If he could start the stall—the shop—a cart for Letty.'

The doctor was forced to leave him. When he came back in the afternoon Willy was rational, and when the doctor wished to go for his sister, said:

'No, don't bring Letty here. She must know how poor I am. When you go out on Sundays to see her I have my good suit on. She calls me a swell. She does "laughing," but when I leave her eyes, "I went once with some papers to a Quaker boarding-school for girls near town, sir. They were such lovely young ladies, I always thought of you and Letty when I read the money. But now—'

Dr. Avery found out his story by degrees. He was the children of a planter near Savannah. His mother was in Philadelphia during her war. Her husband was killed, her money and property were gone. She struggled for years teaching and sewing to support them, and at last died, leaving Willy in charge of his little sister.

'And your name?'

'My father was Charles Gilbert. Dr. Avery drew his breath quickly. He knew Charles Gilbert in Savannah long ago. No wonder your voice sounded familiar. And that I was ready to pay so strongly. But you are my friend for your own sake, my boy.'
