

ed, revised and enlarged, St. John, J. & A. McMillan, 1892, pp. 100.

Christian Reunion. The Hulsean lectures for 1886, Cambridge. St. John, J. & A. McMillan, 1888, cloth, pp. 95.

Church Parties and Christian Unity: A sermon preached on Whit-Sunday, May 20, 1888, at St. John's Church, St. John. St. John, J. & A. McMillan, 1888.

Christianity and Biblical Criticism: A paper, read before the St. John Clerical Association, March 11th, 1890. St. John, J. & A. McMillan, 1890.

Youth and Death. A sermon preached in St. John's church, Sunday, Jan. 17, 1892, after the death of the Duke of Clarence. St. John, "Globe," 1892.

Dixon, George.

The Bard of War. A poetical series in which the author proposes to treat of the Russian, Persian and China Wars, also the Rebellion of British India and the Civil War in America from 1861 to 1865, to conclude with the true Fenian Episode and Fall of Republics. St. John, H. Chubb & Co., 1863, pamph.

Dixon, James D., of Sackville, for many years Collector of Customs at Sackville.

History of Charles Dixon, one of the early English settlers of Sackville. Compiled by Jas. D. Dixon, a grandson. Sackville, 1891.

Dobson, J. T.

Swaddling Clothes. Sussex, "Record" office, 1888, pamph., pp. 32.

Dole, William Peters, M. A., is remarked chiefly by the polish which characterizes his writings both in prose and verse. He is a man of varied attainment and has written on classical and political themes with equal skill.

He was born in St. John, June 5th, 1825, the eldest son of Mark Dole, who came to New Brunswick from Massachusetts early in the century. His mother was Elizabeth Fowler, daughter of a Loyalist. On his father's side he was descended from an ancient British family, originally of French extraction, the name being derived from the old town of Dol in Brittany. A member of this family, Richard Dole, ancestor of the American branch, settled at Newbury in 1639.

Mr. Dole received his early education at private schools in St. John, from which he passed to the Grammar school where he became leader and corporation gold medalist. In 1845 he matriculated at King's College, Fredericton, where he won many honors as a classical student, carrying off several prizes and scholarships. At the end of a three years course he passed his examination for the degree in arts.

He then entered the office of W. J. Ritchie, late Chief Justice of Canada, for the study of law. In 1852 he was admitted attorney and the following year was called to the bar. He practised his profession until 1870, when he abandoned the calling, and in conjunction with Dr. James Hutchison established a large school in St. John. At the passing of the Free School Act he entered the public service and for several years held an appointment as inspector of schools. For the last ten years he has kept a private school in St. John.

He has contributed very extensively to the press of the province on a wide range of subjects, including literature, history and politics. He has held strong views politically and has written many leading articles for the papers expressing those views. In British politics he is Conservative and in Canadian politics Liberal, taking an active part in opposition to the whole scheme of Confederation. His prose style is rhetorical and polished and the thought mature and decided. In the skilful manipulation of language he is adroit.

His verse has appeared in the New England and other magazines. His poetic characteristic is the admirable polish that adorns and beautifies his