

Canada also participated during the year in discussions of the Paris Club, an informal group in which official creditors meet with countries experiencing serious debt repayment problems. The objective of these meetings was to restructure the debt in such a way as to lighten the burden on the indebted country and to facilitate repayment. Such meetings were held during the year with nine countries, most of them located in Africa.