The Story of the World's Greatest Gold Mine

December 9, 1909, was an epoch-making day in the development of the gold resources of New Ontario. On that memorable date Noah A. Timmins purchased for $330,000 the 160 acres which later became the Hollinger gold mines, and ultimately the leading unit in the Hollinger Consolidated, the greatest gold mine in the world.

For many decades preceding this event there had been nothing but failure in this great industry. The work of our Ontario Bureau of Mines and of the geological survey at Ottawa had not gone far enough. We derived but little light and leading from these sources. In fact, a tradition that gold did not exist in commercial quantities in Ontario seemed to have gained ground in many minds. The circumstances called for a striking success; otherwise mining for gold must languish all over the province:

When Mr. Timmins staked his millions the Porcupine division was an unbroken wilderness, forty miles from a railway over sand plains and through spruce forests. The Hollinger was, indeed, a raw prospect in 1909; never did the making of a great mine begin closer to the very beginning or under conditions more primitive. The main vein was big and it showed gold in many places, but then it did not look like any veins theretofore known. Only a man of unlimited nerve would have addressed himself to what appeared to be an almost hopeless task.

The crux of the situation lay in two things. First, all necessary money must be available, and second, this money must be employed to the best advantage. P. A. Robbins, E.M., was retained at what in those days seemed to be an extravagant salary, and he was solely charged with the exploration and development of the great prospect. Unfortunately in New Ontario this practice is more often honored in the breach than in the observance, and many failures and much waste of money have followed. The owners of the Hollinger wisely steered clear of these pitfalls and, besides, they went into the great enterprise with success as their goal, and with an invincible determination not to tarry by the way.

The Hollinger Gold Mines was capitalized at $3,000,000 in 600,000 shares of $5 each. Exploration began early in 1910. On the 19th May, 1911, a 20 stamp mill, then nearing completion, was totally consumed by fire. The loss was $125,000. But nevertheless out of the ashes rose a second mill with double the capacity of the first. It began crushing about July 1, 1912. When the 40 stamps had been dropping a bare four months a dividend was declared at the rate of 39 per cent. per annum, payable in instalments of three per cent. every four weeks, equivalent to $1,170,000 per year. In exactly two years and ten months the great mine had been redeemed from the wilderness and had become an important factor in the material progress of Canada. Searches of the history of gold mines everywhere will not disclose a better record. In subsequent articles we will trace step by step the unrivalled growth of the great mine.

An exceptional chance to buy into a property adjoining the great Hollinger mine. 100,000 shares of treasury stock of the Sovereign Porcupine Gold Mines, Limited, is now offered at 25c a share by
