They should take the people into their confidence at least to the extent of telling them what steps the government it self is taking to aid in bringing about a condition such that when our soldiers go to the front their lives will not be uselessly sacrificed because of a lack of munitions of war and of adequate artillery support.

The Vellop The PEOPLE.

Dr. C. C. James, C. M. G., in a recent article in the Toronto News, replying to a question as to the chief thing to do for Canada when the war is over, makes the development of the people the prime object, and he would begin before the war is over. For twenty years, he says, we have directed our attention to material resources, and when we did give consideration to the people it was more or less a mere counting of heads. We have built railroads, canals, wharves and public buildings, launched speculative undertakings to an enormous extent, borless as mere counting of heads. He started up a business on a dollarmore rapidly in the direct development of material resources than in the de-

We have largely overlooked that, but the war has brought us to a standstill, and we are face to face with the greatest problem that we have ever known. My problem that we have ever known. My answer to your question then is that we should sit down and reason together and prepare plans looking to the care of our people and increasing the efficiency of all classes. If we do that the future Canada is assured. For a generation the legislatures and most of the press have shied at direct taxation, and now see where we are.
