A private letter from M. Du Chaillu, received by the last mail from London, communicates some intoresting particulars of his last exploring journey. We have before noted that it was M. Du Chaille's purpose to cross the continent of Africa from the West Coast, and that he had been attacked and pobled by the natives. He writes:—I have been in new countrier, and penetrated much further into the heart of Africa than before. I met eight new titbee, hithest ounknown, amongst them a dwaff people who call themselves Ohon.

had come to kill them, immediately attacked as, and we were forced to retreat and fight our way back, part of the time under terrible difficulties. I was wounded twice with poisoned arrows, but escaped with life and limb, and am now well.

A person having an ass to go by train from North Shields, sent it to the goods station for Noreastle. The porters were placing it in a van, when a fop asked what they charged for taking the animal. "Ninepence, sir," was the reply. "And pray, my good fellow, what do you charge for a donker" inquired the fop "Sir," rejoined the porter, "you know what you paid for your ticket."
