"Jabez Strong, I'm not going to stand this thing another day:"

"Sho, ma, how you talk!"

"And you've got to help me."

"The court had been milled the hors."

"It allus makes things wuss to mix in," answered her husband after a minute.

"It was this state of affairs that had provoked the indignation of Mrs. Strong. She didn't think it right on the part of Zebediah to keep Emeline on the part of Zebediah to keep Emeline."

stant this thing another day."

"Sho, ma, how you talk!"

"And you've got to help me."

The lows had been milked, the hogs fed, atd Jabez Strong, farmer, had there his seat beside his wife on the veranda He didn't ask what it was she would not stand, for the matter had beet the subject of numerous conversations before. He had always as sumed a neutral position and argued that things would come out all right if left alore, but now he realized that a crisis had arrived.

"If she lad a mother it would be different," northuned the good wife, as she fanned away the mesquitoes with a folded paper, "but she hasn't one she's only rot a father, and he's the biggest old-poke in six counties. Jest the latt, thing Melvina Williams, said me on har dying bed was to be a mother to Eucline, and now I'm going to be or know the reason why. I'm going to be or know the at alk with the would be men would have fallen in love with sele

Emeline inside of a week, for she was a bright, attractive country maiden, but Zeb waited three months. It came to be a case of love on both sides, and three months later he proposed and was accepted. It stopped short at that, so far as Zeb was concerned. He meant to marry some day, but that day was indefinite. Farmer Williams came to know of the engagement, but he had no opinion to express. He went on with obsplowing and eating boiled dinners and left matters to fate.

It was this state of affairs that had provoked the indignation of Mrs. Strong. She didn't think it right on the hooks," as she expressed it. While all other young men were driven and began:

"Emeline inside of a week, for she was bright, attractive country maiden, the volud hat she had so week, for she was a bright, attractive country maiden, the was a jovial, hustling young man. It he hadn't had a sweetheart, back home, the would have fallen in love with Emeline Williams. It was while he was indefinite. Farmer Strong thought he had seen some one proving around. A trip to the barn showed that the gray horse in the barn showed that the gray horse of the barn showed that the gray horse and to provided the indignation of Mrs. Strong, She didn't think it right on the hooks," as she expressed it. "Emeline, it's a dreadful thing for a girl to be in love and have no mother and an old poke of a father. I can't stand it any longer. I've got to be your mother and advise with you." "But father is kind and good, and

Zeb is—is—"
"Zeb is what? Been engaged for a year and a half and he hain't asked you to set the day yet. He may go another year and a half. He may go five years. You can't tell nothing about such a critter. He'll keep poking along till he's bit by a rattlesnake or falls off the roof of a barn. I'm going to talk o you jest as if you were my daughter. Something's got to be done." "I-I can't do anything," stammered the girl, as she turned her face away to hide the color

"But you can, and you're going to. That's where you need a mother. That's where a mother's plans come in. If I had five daughters I'll bet I'd marry the last one of 'em off in two years Now, Emeline Williams, stop twiddling your thumbs and blushing and hitch-ing around and listen to me."

And inside of ten minutes she had And inside of ten minutes she had developed her plan and guaranteed its successful working. There were objections, but she overruled them. There were protestations, but she silenced them. Half an hour after the girl had run back home with her tea, the plan had been communicated to Bert, Mrs Strong's brother and entered upon the heartiest manner. He had been introduced to the Williams household and, following out the plan, he crossed the following out the plan, he crossed the road and spent four hours talking to Emeline on the veranda. Zebediah saw them from the cornfield. During the first hour he was easy in his mind.

During the second he wondered a bit.
Before the third was ended, he was feeling the gnawing pangs. He came up to supper sullen and morose, and now and then during the evening he flung out something about 'that squirt from Illinois." Bert came the next day and the pext. He also came in the evening. He almost ignored Zeb, while he made every effort to entertain Emeline. He even aroused her father from his wonted lethargy. Zeb wanted to do some there seemed nothing for him to do. He lay in his bed one night thinking things over, and gritting his teeth, and won-

There was another horse in the barn and waiting only long enough to slip on a bridle, Zeb mounted and was off for the nearest village. As he went clattering through the midnight darkness he saw red. In his heart he was a murderer ten times over. He did not have to go to the village, Three miles from home he met a boy driving the old gray more homeward. He had been paid a dollar by the "squirt" to do so after the young man had taken the train. The boy was positive that there

When your dealer, in filling your order for any of above goods, reaches for a substitute, STOP HIM. That is the time to do it. It is too late when you get home, and the package opened, partially used and found wanting, as is generally the case with substitutes.

There are many reasons why you should ask for the above well advertised articles, but absolutely none why you should let a substitut-ing dealer palm off something which he claims to be "just as good," or "better" or "the same thing" as the article you ask for. The huying public recognize the superior quality of well advertised and standard articles like Gillett's goods. The substitutor realizes this fact and tries to sell inferior goods on the
