

House presented to the Alumni, they are more than ever convinced of the divine origin of, and of God's continued presence with, the work : they recognize that the burden has hitherto rested too much on the shoulders of the few, and that this has been partly due to the want of information regarding the work ; they wish to assure Mr. Hoyles and the committee that the discussion arising from his letter has aroused our sympathy and awakened our conscience, and that we will endeavor to show our conviction in a very practical way.

The scattering of the graduates of the Home by marriage and missionary calls we believe does much to spread the principles of the work.

We believe that the systematic training of missionary women, Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers generally, is an absolute necessity, and not only would they deeply deplore the curtailment of the work but they pledge themselves to further it in every way possible."
