By The Duchess

"Oh, she isn't bad," says her brother broadly, "but may I ask how she proposes tackling the old gentleman?"

"Through Seaton. I—I'm afraid it won't come off, but still I cling somehow to a hope in her plan. She seems to like Seaton awfully, praises him up to the skies and, in fact, said some very pretty things about him. Tom, do you think she looks like a successful person?"

"I only know this," says Tom, "that once she makes up her mind to accomplish anything, she goes at it hammer and tongs, until her point is gained. I really think you couldn't have a better person to fight for you."

"If Seaton helps her—but is he to be depended upon? That's the question. Oh, the joy of getting out of this once more, if only for a day or two."

"If she asks you at all, it will be for a month. As to Seaton—The words die on his lips, his presently with an angry frown: having turned a corner of the secluded pathway they had chosen the run into the arms of Seaton. 'Dysart! For a moment the two men gaze blankly into each other's eyes: not a word is spoken; as for Griselda, not proof against this last misfortune, she catches up the tail of her gown and flies inconspicuously from the spot!

"What is the meaning of this masquerade?" demands Dysart. "You certainly have every right to ask," says Peyton with a rueful glance at his damnable clothing. "What brings you here Peyton, in that dress and with my cousin?"

"You certainly have every right to ask," says Peyton with a rueful glance at his damnable clothing. "What brings you here Peyton, in that dress and with my cousin?"

If you have tire troubles, let our vulcanizer know. He never tires of hearing tire troubles that tire the nerves of auto owners and chauffeurs. There is no tire built that he cannot vulcanize and bring back to it the breath of life—unless the casing is practically gone. Our vulcanizing saves many dollars.
