Silent Power.

EDITOR "THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE":

The great forces of nature are silent. Plant growth, the food of man and beast, comes forth in silence. The giant trees of the forest are reared by the evolution of myriad minute cells toward the blue heavens—in silence. The great central glory—the visible creation's "eye and soul"—fills his empire with light and life without audible voice. Voiceless also are the stars, unnumbered suns ruling systems but little known to us. Gravitation, the unseen energy which holds suns and attendant worlds each in its orbit, acts ever in silence. The ether of electricity is potential or silent power; and what unmeasured power is this! power, too, that man may yet more fully control. In its active effects it is transient, as the lightning's flash or the telegraphic despatch; in repose it is a permanent, potential force.

Some one has said: "Silence is called golden, because it is an indication of power in repose. The man who doth not say all, has learned the great diplomacy of life." The suggestion of reserve force—of unused or unknown power—inspires confidence, admiration or awe. There are heights and depths in the mind of man, as in the realm of nature, beyond the reach of line or plummet. With an indication of these the goal is attained. This is one of the elements of the power of what we call great minds, as, Shakespeare, Milton, Carlyle, Emerson, Browning, Victor Hugo, who have the power to speak as it were in blank spaces or between lines—to charge the mind of the reader through silence and suggestion.

The light of genius itself shines with permanence only in the written or printed page. Oratory, sublime though it may be, is strictly a transient force, its effect in many instances passing with the utterance. Where, to-day, would be the great ones of the past, were it not for the silent pages of history? What should we know of the vast conception, the luminous and lofty diction of Homer, the poignant satire of Juvenal, the stately rhythm of Virgil, the philosophy of Plato, the eloquence of Demosthenes, Cicero or Longinus? Tradition might afford some glimpses of remote times, but had nothing been written such knowledge would be negligible. Recent men and events would be little better known through merely spoken words. Written words carry dignity, permanence, power. While oral expression reaches the mind through the ear, writing has the two-fold avenue—the ear and the eye. Also, the visible expression may be fixed or impressed on the mind by reference and reading. Through the silent archives of literature we may in available moments meet, or renew acquaintance with, the wise and the great, without embarrassment and without formality.

Carlyle wrote thus of silence: "Looking round on the noisy inanity of the world, words with little meaning, actions with little worth, one loves to reflect on the great empire of silence. . . . higher than the stars; deeper than the kingdoms of death! It alone is great; all else is small."

Yorkshires, Oxfords and Collies.

B. Armstrong & Son, Codrington, Ont., write "The Farmer's Advocate" that they have had many flattering letters from purchasers of their stock, and since they have procured one of the best boars they could obtain in Ontario to mate with their herd of Yorkshire sows they look forward with a good deal of confidence to the future trade. With regard to this mating they write: "This boar mated with our good brood matrons is sure to give us a class of stock that we can confidently recommend to any intending purchaser." Referring to their Collies and Oxford Down sheep the letter says: "In Collies we are expecting two litters, bred from high-class exhibition stock that are splendid workers. We bred and sold a dog, from one of our present females, that was held at a $25 stud-fee in the United States and it was well patronized at that. In Oxfords we have a few good ones, and we hope to be able to satisfy our customers in this line as well as we have

AGRICULTURAL LIME

The farmers of England have limed their meadows and pasture lands in the fall for hundreds of years. Why? You lime yours and the question will be answered; also lime your plowed clay land this fall. You will find it more tillable and earlier to get on to. That means earlier seeding, and be sure to seed clover where you put lime. Write us for prices, if we have no agent in your locality.
