Curious Bit News.

Professor D. J. Cutham, F.R.S., in a discourse on the Royal Dublin Society, said that a distinguished French astronomer reckoned that Adam was 123 in height, and Eve 118 feet, and that in medieval times there was a opinion that a giant was a person whose feet high he did not consider "was any conclusive evidence to show the human stature had ever exceeded feet."

Statistics in the "Irish" show that twins are as one in 100 births. Of triplets there is only instance in 6,400 which justified aim on the "King's bounty," and quadruplets are as one to 512,000; while chances of a quintuplet are even remote, the ratio being one in 40,960,000. The figures are grateful, and mention a case in which a woman sent her husband with seven sets of triplets.

Miss Maude Gonne, was married the other day to Major de la Motte, late of the Boer army, is the daughter of an Irish Protestant landowner, served the English army, and was born in 1866. She is good-looking having been presented at the gal court she reigned as a beauty in society for some time. When she died some years ago she left herself with the extreme section (Irish party), and has been a keen supporter since. Her younger sister is equally handsome, is married to a Pilcher who distinguished himself in the war Major McBride, though a son of the Clan-na-Gael, is an Ulster.

Before the Cambridge Zoological Society in England, Professor Ridgway produced evidence, and scientific, to prove that Barbary horse, from which all the horses of the world have sprung, were either from the zebra of North Africa, or more likely, from some closely allied species now extinct. The Africa, therefore, and not the original home of the zebra. More than 900 years before Christ Solomon imported horses from Egypt, got them from Lybia, not clear, says Professor Ridgway, that the Arabs never owned a grey until they had become masters of North Africa and the Barbary, from whom are sprung our own stock.

The first woman in the world to own a private touring car was Mrs. Isaac E. Emerson of Boston. Mrs. Emerson, unlike her husband, who was a traveling man, and as a Christmas gift her husband proposed the touring car will be one of the largest turned out by the Pullman Company. Any will be the basis of the car, woodwork, but the richest species and the softest and thickest carpets will almost conceal it. Both with every appliance, will be built up to be at least four staterooms, a library, a dining room and then the car will be furnished as a private migratory house, with its drier, cut glass, linen and upholstery will be in commission at all times it can be started at any hour day or night that Mrs. Emerson desires. Emerson said that she counts a number of "traveling houses" as soon as the luxurious vehicle is completed, and that she and her husband would see every foot of this as well as Canada and Mexico.

An unflattering but amusing picture of "Americans" as he found them is given by a disgruntled man. When we talk of France says he, "Oh, but you should see!" They reckon up their build the cubic acre, and the greatest beauty of an edifice is their of stories it has. They take their guide-book and study the expensiveness and weight of stone, they say, "it is not as big as Waterloo or the White House." At are happy. The "American" is one superlative, exactly the same and literature as in industry. It testifies! The biggest picture, the biggest machine, I dare say would really like to have the biggish to eat the biggest dinners, I have the biggest feet to cover most ground. The highest ideal of a man can imagine is the biggish machine, and he is always of it and trying to invent it, just as always trying to imitate a man his way of living. He has an it must push his brain to its limit of work at the highest, presly to create machinery. He goes his such a rattle that he cannot the machine until it breaks down. He has given it real long ago, and in ten minutes off a meal it would take a man two hours to get through, and teeth are bad he stops them all. He has trained himself to woeating is a nuisance, so he invents and can carry a pound of bread a loaf of bread in his waistcoat. "It is the little rift within the lute which ever widening, makes the music mute." It is just a little rift in the health of a woman often, which gradually takes the spring from her step, the light from her eyes, the rose from her cheeks and the music from her voice. Perhaps the bug-bear which has frightened the woman from the timely help needed at the beginning has been the dreaded questions, the obnoxious examination, the local treatments, of the home physician. There is no need for these. Nor is there need for continued suffering. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription can be relied on by every woman, suffering from what are called "female troubles," to renew the health and cure the disease. Women are astonished at the results of the use of this medicine. It not only makes weak women "robust and rosy cheeked," but it gives them back the vigor and vitality of youth.

Anecdotal.

As a result of the chronic state of drought in Australia, much attention is being given to the question of irrigation, and the story goes that a minister who was asked to appoint a day of prayer for rain answered that the people ought to pray less and dam more.

When Mr. Chamberlain was about to begin the speech which he made from the balcony of the Marine Hotel, at Durban, he was startled by the sudden apparition of a reporter who slid down a pillar from the roof, and arrived breathless and dusty, but notebook in hand. Mr. Chamberlain was astonished. "Whom do you represent?" he said. "The entire press of the Empire," was the reply.

It is said that one of the most inveterate writers-out of speeches was the late Lord Derby, of whom the story went that the manuscript of one of his most statesmanlike discourses, being taken from the floor, where he had fallen, was found not only to be freely sprinkled with "Heavens," "Laughter," and "Applause," but also to contain a passage beginning: "But I am detaining you too long (Cries of 'No, no,' and 'Go on!')."

Judge Bacon frequently enlivens his remarks the dreary round of proceedings in the Bloomsbury County Court. "How can two men talk at the same time and understand each other?" he asked a noisy plaintiff and defendant the other day; "it takes two women to do that." To a lady witness: "Raise your veil and put back your hat a little. I want to see your eyes. A woman's eyes are sometimes more tell-tale than her tongue."

Numerous stories are told of the artist Whistler's vanity and self-consciousness, which he delights to exhibit for the pleasure of starting his hearers. A friend, wishing to pay him the highest compliment, once said to him: "Mr. Whistler, you and Velasquez are two of the greatest painters." The artist replied: "Why do you drag in Velasquez?" Again, while sailing down the Thames through one of Nature's gardens, a lady remarked to him: "Mr. Whistler, the whole trip is like a series of your own sketches." "Yes, yes," answered Whistler, "Nature is creeping up."

There is a story of a gentleman who, upon visiting Mt. Vernon, came across a lady kneeling before a building quite a distance from the Washington monument. "Are you in trouble?" he asked her. "No, sir," she replied; "thank you very much. I am not in trouble, but my patriotic feelings overcome me when I gaze upon the tomb of the Father of my Country." "I quite understand," he said, kindly; "but, madam, you have made a mistake. This is not the tomb of Washington; it is over yonder. This is the ice-house." Quickly ceasing her weeping, the lady rose and moved away.

There is nothing that that cheery old gentleman, the Pope, enjoys more than hugging himself on the fact that he is a youth in all but years. Recently a favorite cardinal was dining with him, and after the removal of the dessert, the guest drew from his pocket a dissertation on St. Peter, and proceeded to read, but stuck fast at an ill-written word. The Pope insisted on his handing him the manuscript, and deciphered it at once, smilingly remarking, "You see, my dear friend, you ought always to carry copies of your age. Do buy a pair. For myself, I rarely need them." The cardinal is sixty, the Pope well over eighty.

When Sidney Lee, who will shortly lecture in Toronto, delivered his first lecture in the Lowell Institute course, he spoke of those Americans who went to England and achieved distinction there and thus obtained a place in his "National Dictionary of English Biography." He referred to the residence of Count Rumford in Rumford, N.H., afterward called Concord, which, the lecturer said with warmth, is a name known to the learned throughout the world. This palpable confusing of the Concord, N.H., with Concord, Mass., was too much for the gravity of the audience, and their amusement increased when some realized that the chief literary renown of Concord, N.H., comes at the present time from "Mother" Eddy.

Though so princely in "bestowing" at death, Radcliffe, the eminent physician, was so mean during life that he would, it is said, even avoid paying his share at a tavern reckoning whenever he could contrive. It was only after long following and importunity that he could ever be got to pay his bills. An amusing story is told of a combat he once had with a roadman who had called for payment for some work he had done outside the doctor's door. "How, you rascal," said Radcliffe, attempting to evade the demand, "do you pretend to be paid? You have spoilt my pavement and covered it over with earth to hide your bad work." "Doctor," was the man's smart retort, "mine is not the only bad work on the earth today." "You dog!" replied Radcliffe, "you are a wit; you must indeed be poor. Come in"—and paid him.

A Minneapolis paper declares that some time ago the two Younger brothers, two Western outlaws, who used to move in the inner circles of Jesse James's most exclusive set, were liberated after twenty years' imprisonment. The day they were set free they received a pressing invitation from the manager of Jacob Little's Theater there to occupy a box at the play that evening. They accepted with avidity, and the news of their coming having been extensively advertised, the theater, of course, was packed to suffocation. The brothers came early, but did not begin to peruse their programme until just before the curtain rose. Then one of them was seen to spring to his feet and make a frantic effort to escape from the box. The manager intercepted him with a polite request as to what was amiss. "Good God!" he cried, with a string of oaths; "what in — have you run us into! Why, this — play was running when we went in." He had just made the heart-breaking discovery that the play was "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

John Knox's House.

The ground floor of John Knox's house, in High street, Edinburgh, has been transformed into a quaint haunt of old books. It has been in turn a hairdresser's, public house, glazier's, restaurant, and tobacco-shop. "Ye house of John Knox," which is one of the most picturesque of Edinburgh relics, was standing in 1490. Surviving many vicissitudes till 1559, it was then rented by the Town Council of Edinburgh for the "lodging" of John Knox, when they called him to be minister of St. Giles, in 1559. From the west window he frequently preached, and here, in November, 1572, he died.

"Try or own hair-tonic" asked the said barber. "We guarantee it to sprout hair on the barest head." "Why on't you use it on your own?" asked the customer, thinking to baffle his tormentor. "Because," whispered the barber confidentially, "they won't let me. They make me shave my hair off so as to be the 'before-using' exhibit. My brother, let's the 'after-using.' He's out just now, but you ought to see his hair!"

GIVE IT A REST

That is What the Stomach Signals For—Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets Will Digest the Food While the Stomach Rests.

Those who are suffering from the first mild discomforts that are the forerunners of Dyspepsia little realize what the future has in store for them unless the warnings sent out by the distressed stomach are heeded. The stomach signals that it needs rest, and if it does not get it it grows more tired and less able to do its work as time wears on, and the while those discomforts grow to pains and the pains to agonies that are a terrible menace to life itself.

Taken warning from those who have learned by terrible experience the pains and dangers of Dyspepsia, Mrs. John E. Sillars, of Western Bay, Newfoundland, is one of them. Here is what she says:

"For seven years," Mrs. Sillars relates, "I suffered from Dyspepsia. I could not eat without suffering intense agony. I doctored some but to no avail, and I had almost given up myself to die. An advertisement in a paper drew my attention to Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets and I bought some and began to take them. From almost the first dose I found relief, and after using five boxes I found myself well and strong."

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets digest the food themselves. They give the over-worked stomach a chance to get the rest that it needs.

All kinds of questions come to the answers-to-correspondents man of a daily paper, and the impatience he occasionally manifests is not surprising.

"Editor of —," wrote an enquiring citizen one day, "will you please tell me how many kinds of typewriters there are?"

This was answered to the answers-to-correspondents man, and in the next issue of the paper he replied to it as follows: "Two—male and female."
