A fine, robust soldier, an Irishman, after serving Uncle Sam for some time, became greatly reduced in weight, owing to exposure and scanty rations, until he was so weak he could hardly stand. Consequently, he got leave of absence to go home and recuperate.

He arrived at his home station looking very much of a wreck. Just as he stepped off the train, one of his old friends rushed up to him, and said:

"Well, well, Pat, I am glad to see you're back from the front."

"Begorra, I knew I was getting thin, but I niver thought you could see that much," said Pat.

"The body of the late Major Jinks was cremated." "What they goin' to do with it?" "His widow has him corked up in a fruit jar." Says it's the last of the family jars."

The Farmer's Liability.

The question of the liability of the farmer in the case of the sale of a beef animal, which, on slaughter, was found to be tuberculous, has recently been tested before the Lord Chief-Justice in the British High Court, King's Bench Division. Following is the comment of the Scottish Farmer on the trial:

The argument of the butcher, based on the Sale of Goods Act, was that, seeing he bought the bullock for slaughter as human food, there was an implied warranty that its carcass would be suitable for the purpose in view. The point was very well argued. The butcher's counsel maintained that, seeing the butcher was held liable if he sold diseased meat, even when he had no knowledge of its being diseased, the farmer from whom he bought the animal should be made liable to him. Counsel argued that the butcher should not be held liable for failure to diagnose disease on a cursory glance, but that the farmer should be amenable of the law, seeing he would have the animal in his possession for possibly twenty-seven or twenty-eight weeks. The farmer had opportunities for seeing and examining the bullock, and if it was tuberculous, he ought to have known.

Some interesting points came out in evidence. The butcher was confronted with the resolution of one of his own trade federations, to demand an express warranty of soundness from farmers. If there was already, as the pursuer in this case maintained, an implied warranty, there was no need for an express warranty being exacted. Expert evidence was laid, and, as usual, it was contradictory. Professor Owen Williams, of University College, Liverpool, averred that some symptoms of disease would have shown themselves in an animal so badly tuberculous as the animal in dispute. He also alleged that by means of the tuberculin test farmers could protect themselves. The flesh of this particular animal was said to be excellent, and the bench had some difficulty in believing that a farmer could have supposed that such an animal was diseased. The veterinary inspector of the market gave splendid evidence. He was candid to a degree. Asked what chance there was of detecting disease in an animal through such an examination as he was able to make while the animals passed before him, he promptly answered, "Not much." Doing his best to ascertain whether beasts coming into the market were healthy or not, he was forced to admit that he could not so ascertain in one case out of twenty. In other words, the meat inspection in some markets is purely nominal.

The strongest witness on the side of the farmer was Sir John McFadyen, an eminent veterinary authority. He described the tuberculin test, and expressed his opinion that it was not a test for a farmer to use. It was a veterinary operation, and unreliable in the case of field cattle. When rightly applied, it was almost infallible, but it could not tell the extent of the disease. His point in evidence was that a farmer did not give an implied warranty, and could not give an express warranty.

In putting the case to the jury, the Lord Chief-Justice asked two questions: (1) Did the plaintiff (butcher) really rely upon the defendant's skill and judgment? And (2) could the defendant, by reason of his skill and judgment, ascertain whether the animal was tuberculous? The jury answered both queries in the negative, so that the highest court has decided against the butcher, and practically declared that he must bear the loss, if he has invested in a tuberculous animal.

The Board of Health of New York City has issued an order requiring all persons who milk cows to wear white duck overalls and jackets, else the milk will not be allowed to enter New York. As much of the milking in the rural districts about New York is done by women, the order has created great indignation. The women say they just won't wear overalls, so there! Indiana Exchange.
