THE LATE JUDGE McFADDEN

The Goderich Star, Jan. 19

As mentioned in our last issue, the death took place at Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., on Wednesday afternoon of last week of Judge Moses McFadden, K. C., brother-in-law of Mr. J. J. Doyle, of town, the remains being brought to Goderich for interment, accompanied by his son, Mr. John H. McFadden, and his brother, Mr. Uriah McFadden, also by Lieut. McFadden, Hamilton, nephew; D. Walker, Brussels, brother-in-law, and T. G. Hamilton, Milverton, a cousin. The funeral took place on Saturday morning from Mr. Doyle's residence to St. Peter's church, where requiem Mass was sung by Rev. Father McEneaney, and the interment was made in the Catholic cemetery in Colborne.

Judge McFadden was born at Edgecombe on the Nith river, Perth county, where his father, the late Uriah McFadden, settled when he came to this country.

Judge McFadden came to the Soo in 1857. It was winter time and his object in coming here was to practise law. The little village grew, and when it became a town in 1858, he was clerk as well as all the formalities were attended to, and as town solicitor looked after it through its teething period when the many agreements with the Clergue companies were made. In all Judge McFadden was town solicitor for twenty years.

"He organized the first Mechanics' Institute here in 1858, being elected president, organized the first brass band in 1857 and in other ways gave the early inhabitants something to think about.

"In 1905 His Honor stood for Sault Ste. Marie in the Conservative interest but was defeated by a small margin by Mr. C. N. Smith.

"He was connected with the Masonic Fraternity, having been a master of Keystone Lodge, A. F. and A. M. and also a Deputy District Grand Master. He was also a member of Algonquin Chapter, R. A. M., and of Gibson Commandery of the Knights Templar. He also belonged to the Knights of Pythias. (He was received into the Church last August. ED. CATHOLIC RECORD.)

"Judge McFadden enjoyed the honor of being made an occupant of the bench here three years ago after a residence of 26 years in the Sault. It is usually thought desirable to choose an outside man, and the fact that the Sault Law Society unanimously asked for his elevation here testified to the high regard in which he was held by his conferees of the bar.

In the course of his editorial reference The Sault Star has the following tribute to the departed judge.

"In the death of Moses McFadden the citizens lose a kindly neighbor, and one who sought to regulate his life as he was given light to do it. He ever sought to do his duty with a tenderness for the frailties of mankind. To him his fellow citizens were simply honest people who did the best they could—and sometimes made mistakes. He was a crown officer who tempered the letter of the law where his heart and conscience directed him.

"He had a deeply spiritual nature. A heroic deed made an appeal to him. For instance the story of John Brown, of Harper's Ferry, who gave his life for a principle, impressed him so much that he idealized the man and as a tribute to his memory prepared the only lecture he ever gave. Judge McFadden could understand a man giving up everything for a principle. He spoke constantly of the necessity of a man being fair with himself and living up to his ideals. He was intolerant of intolerance, and hated only pretence."

A GREAT RELIGIOUS

Last Monday, God commanded to His court a great-souled woman whom, for many years, it has been our privilege to know. The Religious of the Sacred Heart will have learned of her how to pardon one, who undertakes under pressure of great regret and deep love a task beyond his strength. Yet to their own deeper sorrow there may come some relief from the tributes of one, not of their household, who respected an esteemed her beyond all that words can say.

Sister Catharine Hartigan, always brought to our mind the strong phrase of St. Luke, whose judgment on women is what we might expect from the Gospels of the Magnificat. She was "a woman from the crowd." In mind and heart and soul she was every inch a woman. There was nothing unmanly about her being; nothing unwomanly. She was one of that vast crowd of women—whom no man can number—to whose manliness of soul the weak things of faith and love look when men have grown scarce or faint-hearted. In speaking of St. Paul's conversion, the Church grandly says that "The Lord took a man from the people; and gave him sight of the everlasting vision." By that sight the saint was raised above the main body of people. Sister Hartigan had a divine and very human outlook which raised her almost conspicuously above the "crowd," and it argued a lack of spiritual instinct not to be struck by her loyalty to authority and by the supremacy of the great principles of faith and, still more, love wielded over her soul. One had only to hear the manly emphasis she put on certain words of her choice to feel that in all the things that matter most she could take and keep her stand. Her long, loyal, loving life betokened the supremacy of the soul; and that is ruled by the undying "eternal years."

The Society of the Sacred Heart has made its home in Halifax for the past fifty years and Sister Hartigan was no little part of that history. She often recalled the past, not like the dying king in bitterness of spirit, but with a reserve and delicacy which were to us the lesson from the lips of mercy. Everything she undertook was conceived in a great chivalrous way. Strength she had and motherly wisdom. But these were the reins of her soul, mercy alone was its spur.

It is almost incredible what great things she did under the goad of her irresistible mercy. Viewed from another and lesser standpoint some of the things she undertook might be called "imprudences," but in this strange world of love and hate, these imprudences are still the salt of the earth. Love of souls alone led her into these complications and love alone could lead her out. She came through it all with her faith, hope and love towards these souls undimmed and even radiant. We say these things because we know them, and they should be said. Every blessing she longed for came to her on her deathbed. She was surrounded by those whose love for her was a supreme witness to her life. The Church's absolution fell upon her soul—as she would have wished—at the moment when, winged with her good works, she flew to the feet of Christ. On her breast they did well to lay white flowers; for under the snows of old age she still bore the white, pure, tender, enthusiastic heart of a girl. And he who promised the kingdom to such as are children at heart and mercy to the merciful of heart has taken account of her mercy and of the tears that made a noble mourning round her grave.

THE LATE MRS. DAVID L. CROWLEY

(The Evening Examiner, Peterborough, Jan. 23)

The funeral of the late Mrs. David L. Crowley, who passed away on Saturday at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Lynch, Cedar St., after an illness of several months, was held this morning to St. Peter's Cathedral and thence to St. Peter's cemetery. At the Cathedral the Requiem Mass was celebrated by her son, Reverend Thomas Crowley, of Copper Cliff, assisted by Rev. C. J. Phelan, deacon, and Rev. J. J. O'Brien, sub-deacon. Bishop O'Brien, Rev. Dean McColl, Rev. Father Collins and Father McHugh were present. The late Mrs. Crowley was born in Ontario and had resided in Peterborough thirty-five years, where with the members of the family she was widely known and highly respected. She was predeceased by her husband many years ago. The surviving children are Rev. Father Crowley, Sergt. Will Crowley with the Canadian Engineers in France, Mrs. Wm. Lynch of Peterboro, Mrs. M. J. Shea of Sudbury, and Miss Agnes Crowley of Copper Cliff. At this morning's Mass Bishop O'Brien spoke briefly on the life of the deceased.

QUEBEC GIVES A MILLION DOLLARS

The grant of one million dollars to the Canadian Patriotic Fund for 1917 by the Quebec Legislature is a most cheering indication of the value placed on the work of the Fund by the Government of Sir Lomer Gouin, and may be taken as an evidence also of the growing realization in the province of what demands the war is making on our wealth in money. The Ontario Legislature is making a grant of the same size, and there is a tendency on the part of all the Provincial Governments to aid this meritorious work.

Quebec raised more money in 1916 than was needed to make provision for her own families, and the surplus was devoted to the Western Provinces, where enlistments were above the average. It is probable that a similar condition will arise in 1917.

FRANCE'S RELIGION

Among the first and most lasting of all the impressions which crowd on the French soldier when he goes to France is the religion of the French nation visualized before him, says the London Daily Mail.

As the troopship goes slowly up the river to Rouen a French priest stands on the bank and with uplifted hands blesses the men as they pass. Often little children hang round his cassock, and woe betide the gamin who keeps his cap on his head while the cure prays, for he will most inevitably have it knocked off and his ears cuffed for his irreverence. And the very first letters home tell of the incident.

After that the Protestant and non-conforming British soldier, and also he who thought himself an unbeliever gradually absorbs some of the temperamental feeling of the more emotional religion of the Catholic country in which he finds himself. The impossible, the unbelievable in all material things, has come to pass in this two years of war. All life is upside down. Why, then, should not the impossible and unbelievable in spiritual things also come to pass? The man who in days past found refuge in "It stands to sense," now shakes his head wisely and says, "Funny thing, but—"

"All people when they come under stern discipline and are obliged to practice obedience as are children again, and that is why soldiers and sailors always show a peculiar and charming simplicity of heart, why there is a pathos about them that appeals to all who stop at home, to women, and which makes them loved of children. And so the ground is ready made for new religious feeling, for belief in the miraculous, for the absorption of superstitions, for the desire for something tangible, for some comfort to hold in times of trouble, and above all for hope."

Women when they receive the "effects" of their sons and husbands have found little crosses, a rosary, or perhaps a saintly relic, the gift of some sympathetic French peasant or Red Cross nurse; little bits of religion which have been held to as mascots and, having helped some soldier through many bad hours, have now come to his relations with the message of some spiritual life, of

THE POWER OF EXAMPLE

The ordinary every-day man of the world seems to be as indifferent to the powerful influence he might yield by his good example as he is to the disastrous effect others may suffer by imitating him in his wrongdoing. Who of us but does not attribute many of the good habits we have to someone in whom we first admired them? As a writer in America remarks: "What is needed is a more easy and natural diffusion of Catholic ideals in secular life. . . . The more Catholic a Catholic is, the better, even in the eyes of the enemies of the Church. The world's dislike of lukewarmness and evasion is second only to that of God for the same thing. Never does a Catholic in secular life make so grave a mistake as when he endeavors to conceal, or above all to apologize for his convictions. There is not a function or service of human affairs in the matter of social relations that is not rarefied, sweetened and invigorated by those celestial airs which breathe from a sincere, urbane and gentle Catholic."

PESTIFEROUS LITERATURE

The cheap magazines, that are so popular on account of their pictures, their lively articles, and their price, are now making stronger and more open appeals to the sex instinct by means of stories of passionate love and risky situations. They are becoming a pest.—Catholic Columbian.
