Port Arthur, Ont., Feb. 4.—The story of the destruction of a German submarine off Aberdeen, Scotland, is told in a letter to a citizen of Port Arthur. It became known that an undersea boat was operating just outside the harbor and it had already sunk a trawler.

It so happened that at that time a British submarine was in harbor and the commander decided that with he would get the German. So he ordered a trawler to steam out while he, with his craft submerged and connected by a long line, followed.

About a mile out the German sub popped up and prepared to torpedo the trawler. The signal was conveyed to the British submarine by the submerged line. It quickly rose, periscoped the German, and in a couple of minutes the enemy craft was blown up.
