Job Printing Executed!

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

Doubtless most of you have read in your newspapers within the past few weeks of the death of America's grand old woman, Julia Ward Howe.

And by the obituary notices you were doubtless reminded of Mrs. Howe's having written the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," and of her great services to the cause of Abolition.

I happened to have the great honor of knowing Julia Ward Howe, and of being occasionally "received" into her home, and I want to tell you the thing that impressed me the most about her. And that was, not the work that she had accomplished, but simply the wonderfully beautiful old age which the quality of her life made possible for her.

You cannot often say "beautiful old lady" and really mean it. You could of her. I never saw a young woman who gave any more pleasure to the eye than this exquisite old lady as she held away from her "Throne Chair," as the visitors call it. She almost always wore a lavender gown and a white lace cap beneath which her white hair was parted and drawn softly back. Her hands and face looked as if they were carved out of ivory. Thomas Lawson, who paid her a beautiful tribute at her death, called her a Dresden china figure. She always made me think more of lavender, ivory, old lace and things of that sort.

But the really beautiful thing about her was the wonderful expression of that old face. You see Mrs. Howe had never stopped really thinking, never ceased being interested in things. She has had a large family and done her duty by them. A lover-lier family of children and grandchildren you could not hope to see. But she has always had time to be interested in the outside world, to study, to read, to be thoroughly alive.

Mrs. Howe was 91 when she died, and yet up to her last illness she wrote a little every day, read a little Greek and Latin, and practiced at her piano. Last spring there was some question about the purity of the milk the Boston babies were getting, and it was Julia Ward Howe's pen and presence that aroused the public in this serious matter.

There is a little story about a portrait of Mrs. Howe, which her son-in-law John Elliott painted, without which no tribute to her is complete. It seems to me this illustrates her greatest service to American women.

This portrait which represents Mrs. Howe sitting in her morning room reading, was exhibited at her son-in-law's studio in Italy. Queen Margherita, who was at the exhibit, was so impressed by this picture that she would scarcely look at any other. She asked many questions about the original, and as she was about to leave came to Mr. Elliott and said: "You tell me that this is a portrait of a distinguished old woman of your country, but I tell you that it is a picture of old age as it ought to be."

It seems to me it isn't what Julia Ward Howe wrote or her work in the abolition cause that makes her such a great figure. It is more the quality of her life—A life ripening into an old age that deserved such a tribute as that—a life which stands as a pattern for that which, without neglecting her home or children, a public-spirited woman's life ought to be.

In washing small, dried fruits, such as cherries, currants or raisins, the best way is to turn them into a colander or coarse sieve and stand it in a deep pan of clear water. Rub the fruit thoroughly between the hands and change the water as often as needed. Finally hold the vessel and turn on cold water, then spread on fresh towels to dry.

Window and door screens usually get very dusty during the latter part of the summer, and it is poor economy to put them away in that condition; neither is it a good idea to wash them just before storing unless they are most carefully dried to prevent rusting. Last year I tried Kerosene, applying it with a paint brush, and found that it cleaned the wires better than water, besides preventing rusting.

The family bottle of glue generally becomes a great nuisance and of little use after it has been opened for a few days. It becomes hardened and impossible to use. It may be softened by heat or by adding a teaspoonful or more of vinegar to the bottle, and allowing it to stand for a few minutes. If the bottle can be kept in a warm place all the time it will stay soft as long as there is any left.

One who has grown accustomed to using a damp cloth in dusting will never again resort to a dry rag. Have a small basin or bowl of tepid water always at hand when dusting, and use a piece of soft cheesecloth. Wring the cloth out quite dry and then wipe over the woodwork and furniture. There is no danger of the dust flying around, making one's work in vain, and the dust is actually removed. This method of dusting is especially desirable in the sickroom.

It is a great mistake to allow eyes to freeze in order to keep them from doing so their delicate flavor is injured. Place them in a glass or a stone jar and stand inside the refrigerator, if it contains ice. If not cover with a cloth and stand in a cool place where they will keep cool without freezing. If they are to be served fried, it will not harm them to put small pieces of ice in the jar with them, but do not do so unless ready to bring in it to be served at natural.

As every sprout that starts on a seed potato and is broken off removes a certain amount of vitality from it, care should be taken in storing the potatoes so they will not sprout. The following method will prevent them from sprouting: Dig a pit about ten inches deep, fill with the potatoes, spread straw over them about eight inches deep, then a layer of dirt the same depth; add another layer of straw the same depth, and cover with dirt. When opened in the spring the potatoes will be just as they were when buried.

It is hard to believe, nevertheless true, that a carpet or rug, whether Axminster or a cotton square, can be effectively cleaned with water. Throw it over a line or bed springs and beat out all the dust you can, then hang on the clothesline and deluge with water from the garden hose. The first water will remove the dirt, so use plenty on both sides, to rinse thoroughly. Dry in the shade or at night, so as not to fade the colors. We have tried this a great many times, always with the greatest success, and have no hesitation whatever in recommending it, as it is simple and effective.

Strike Threatened

Cardiff, Wales, Nov. 2.—A strike of 200,000 men, which will tie up the coal mining industry of Wales, is threatened as a result of a renewal of the dispute over the employment of non-union men.

Seven thousand employees of the Nixon colliery have given notice that they will walk out. Another colliery employing 8,000 miners is already idle.

The men have assumed threatening attitudes, and violence is feared. The owners of the two mines have asked for police protection.

London, Nov. 1.—London will soon claim to possess the biggest dry goods store in the world. It will be the New Emporium, in which the business founded by the late William Whiteley, who described himself as the "universal provider," will be lodged. The foundation stone was laid on Saturday.

Kitchener's Speech

It was only fitting that Lord Kitchener should take the chair to hear Mr. W. K. McKean read his paper on Khartoum and Omdurman at the Town Planning Conference recently.

At one of the dinners given in his honour during his recent journey through America the famous General apologized for his lack of eloquence. "I can't speak," he said, "and that is why I don't. I think it is better to keep silent than to put you to sleep. The officers of the British Army are noted for their inability to make public speeches. Whenever an officer is foolish enough to rise to answer a toast, the guests say to one another as he sits down 'Well, the bigger the gun, the bigger the bore, you know!'"
