FRIENDSHIP
is no Criterion in the selection of an EXECUTOR

Quite the contrary. As a rule, the less personal interest an Executor has in an Estate, the better the affairs are administered.
The selection of an Executor is a matter of business, not of friendship. Friendship should, therefore, give way to sound business judgment.

The Modern Juggernaut

On a gay joy ride as we sped along, Flowers were crushed and we laughed and sung.
Thoughtless, heedless, came we not out For the pleasure of life, its clamour and rout?
Beauty enchanted, wit flashed bright, As we sensed the gloaming preceding night.
Strong winds assailed, though soft sephyr's swept.
And 'scaping tresses dark or fair Told with what speed the car cut the air.
For laughing eyes, compelling—weep,
But earnest now, with sudden thrill, When a little form lay rigid and still Under the wheels.

Midst trailing steam and whistle's shriek, Crashing we came, and crossed the creek.
And the "all clear" signal caught the eye,
But we clipped the trestle by and bye.
Down, my cities, were quick swept through
For the road's an earner—so are you When you hasten the coaches, but keep the rein.
On a dangerous steed—the flying train, But speeders heed not, and an old man reels.
Through a switch left open
Under the wheels.

The Mill's ripping to-day—dividends high.
'Tis worth the visit of you and I,
And better still, the outputs increased Though some of the old hands are off the list.
Well, they had their day, and what care we?
We don't stick it for pleasure, 'tis a game of gain,
And we're not out for the measure of Fortune and Fame.
But—that gruesome sight, how awful it feels!
That bright lad mangled
Under the wheels.

Thus Mammon relentless rolls on in state.
Through the modern mass who are slaves to him,
'Tis Gold is his goal—insatiate.
His coffers were made to be filled to the brim.
He reeks not of life or life blood that flows Nor the pain, the anguish, of one who feels The grim grip of Death from his lethal blows,
As his shackles cast victims
Under the wheels.

Many Great Men
Have Big Noses.

It is traditional that great men have big noses. Napoleon, it is said, used to pick his generals by their noses.
To ascertain if a big nose is really an indication of superior mental powers Prof. Frederick Adams Woods of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology has for 20 years been collecting portraits of men who have in some way or other distinguished themselves and studying their physiognomy. The results of his investigations he now publishes in the Journal of Heredity.
Prof. Woods began with a collection of the portraits of the world's greatest astronomers. Of these he found that 24 had large or long noses, 17 had average and five had short noses. To check his own opinion as to the relative size of the noses shown in the photographs he submitted them to an associate, whose judgment was that there were 31 large noses, 22 average and three short noses.

Among orators of modern Europe and orators of America, 40 in all, he found 23 large noses, 16 average and one small.
As "Who's Who in America" is not illustrated, he took the Canadian "Who's Who and Why" and went through the portraits under the initials A. B. and C. as fair specimens of the whole number (about 10,000).
His own verdict on them was 52 big noses, 167 average and 45 small; that of his associate was 74 big noses, 151 average and 39 small. The names in this book are, like those in "Who's Who in America," those of men who have certainly done something to raise themselves above mediocrity, but not above whom can by any means be called great. Therefore the proportion of average noses is much larger than in the list of men selected for their real eminence.—Washington

Terrified by An Eclipse.

After the death of the Regent of the Scots—Sir Andrew Murray—Robert the steward was appointed sole governor and his first act was to send the Knight of Liddesdale to the King of France for help against the English; and then, about the end of April, 1339, he laid siege to Perth. The siege had lasted ten weeks, and the Scots were about to give it up, when five French ships of war, with the Knight of Liddesdale—who had executed his commission with well-timed success—appeared in the Tay. The siege then proceeded with renewed vigour, and during its progress there occurred a striking incident. In the midst of the military operations on July 7, and soon after noon, the sun was eclipsed; for a short time there was nearly total darkness, and the eclipse lasted on the whole for nearly two hours and a half, during which the soldiers of both armies forgot their strife, and gazed in terror into the sky. But the leader of the besiegers—Sir William Bullock, who had been Balliol's Chancellor and had deserted his master—unintimidated by what was thought to be a sign of divine death, redoubbe seen flying half-mast in honor of those who:

"With courage unsurpassed and un-

They died; yet in this supreme sacri-

Is marked the moment of the Great
