Cap-ping the limax.

O shade of Jefferson! the hour has come,
To strike the skeptic, and the doubting dumb
Great are the deeds, connected with thy name;
A thousand years, will scarcely dim thy fame
Th' immortal declaration, came from thee,
Whose daring words, first spake a Nation free!
Now, in Detroit, a mighty thoroughfare,
With which no rival city can compare,
Veans thy proud name; with Halls and shops,
Before which, admiration, spell-bound stops!
On whose domain, the wigwam made once stood
When all around, was but a wild dense wood!
The multitude move on—when lo, behold!
Where two vast doors, to right and left unfold,
And in the window, WINTER's well-known name.

Flashes in letters, formed of liquid flame!
Two hundred jets of lambent, glittering gas,
Burn quivering, in characters of brass—
To which rare Temple of exquisite taste,
The eager crowds of cits, by hundreds haste!
Attracted by the brilliant, magic blaze,
In wonder on its beauteous words to gaze—
With Hats, and Caps, of every style and grade
Parisian and New York, fine home made—
While Ladies' Fancy Furs, of colors rich,
Siberian Squirrel, Martin, Lynx and Fitch,
Invite the fair, to wrap their precious forms,
In WINTER's robes, to face the winter's storms
Soon o're the snow, we'll hear the sleigh-bells chimes,
Come gents! then, quick, and for a few small dimes,
A Buffalo secure, with Beaver Gloves;
When as you fly along, with your sweet doves,
So warm beside you, oh! you'll bless the gas,
In WINTER's muse and window, as you pass!
Detroit, December, 1851. 34.
