The bride looked charming in a dress of white silk, trimmed with Burgess point lace, carrying a bouquet of white roses. Her traveling gown was made of hunters' green ladies' cloth. Bertha Willson, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid. She wore a dress of white organdie over pink, and carried a bouquet of pink roses. Miss Annie Aitchison, of Toronto, sister of the groom, acted as maid of honor. Her dress was of white organdie, and she carried pink carnations. Mr. Wesley Strong, of Bolton, supported the groom, and Rev. Mr. Jewitt, of the Methodist Church, Wardsville, was the officiating clergyman. The large collection of beautiful presents testified to the esteem in which the young couple are held. About 70 guests, many of whom were from London, St. Thomas, Windsor and Port Stanley, subsequently sat down to the dainty wedding breakfast.

The city council, together with sevral civic officials, accepted the invitation of the London Rolling Mills Company yesterday to visit their new plant at the foot of William street, where, inside of a few months, a large tract of vacant land has been transformed into one of the city's busiest sections. To say that the council found the work molten mass, which is worked into an egg-shape by the stokers, is quickly interesting describes it mildly. A couple of hours of their precious time were absorbed in watching scrap iron, apparently intended to go only towards the scrap heap, converted into small, clean, merchantable bars of iron. The work was explained to them in detail, ffering amounting to $25 was received, and the impression they received must have been one that would favor the trolley takes it and transfers it to a encouragement of further enterprise of this sort.

shadowed by the chorus, while in the "Dream of Jubal" the reciter claimed the constant attention of the audience Then, compared to the chorus, they were too far forward, and some of the first violins could not see the conductor. In the cantatas they hardly realized the high expectations formed of them from their first number,

Had this point been attended to, the generally poor attack and the frequent mis understandings with the conductor, re sulting two or three times in total collapse, would not have marred otherwise fine work.

This same difficulty caused great indistinctness in the entry of the sev eral voices or parts, and made more evident the lack of crispness and ginger.

It must not be overlooked, though, that the associate conductor had no previous indication of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's intentions as to tempo and expression. There was consequent ly a nervousness through the chorus that tended to upset them at times. The conductor and chorus, not being en rapport, makes it impossible to judge either, since it cannot be said how well or how poorly they would have worked under happier circumstances.

This is the first festival. While not an unqualified success here, it is a most encouraging start. The audience for the most part spent a profitable and pleasurable evening, and all may look forward, in the future, to ever better and better work.
