The mules thinking it about time to go home did not wait for the return of their master, but started. A tall policeman, whose figure is familiar to those who daily pass by the corners of King and Yonge streets, imagining he saw a good opportunity to make himself particularly noted, jumped into the milk-waggon, caught hold of the reins in the left hand and the whip in the right, and in the wildness of his en-thusiasm and the forgetfulness of the dignity of his position, drove away, as he imagined, to glory. He used the whip on the mules in a most astounding manner— the buzz of the lash as it passed through the air could be heard at quite a distance—but to no effect, for the muses would not be made to run, they insisted on walking. The sympathies of all pedestrians who saw ition of affairs were greatly the condition of allairs were greatly troused for the policeman, whose endeavors to accomplish the end he had in view were so marked and whose failure was so decided.
