In the afternoon Dr. W. C. Barrett, M. D., D.D.S., Buffalo, read a very instructive paper on the administration of nitrous oxide and aniesthetics generally. He gave a number of practical experiments showing the effects of carbonic acid gas, nitrous oxide, ether and chloroform upon birds and inferior animals. Nitrous oxide was administered daily at the hands of the most important and yet very few accidents reministered daily at the hands of the most ignorant, and yet very few accidents resulted from its use. He had experimented on two hundred different animals with this gas and had noted results. He had come to a great many results conflicting with each other. Nitrous oxide would support combustion, but carbonic acid would not. The question has wished to solve was: Will not nitrous he wished to solve was: Will not nitrous oxide support respiration? He filled two at the hands of others. The doctor converted mercury into a frozen state by mixing caruonic acid gas which he had soliditied, and ether with the mercury. A large dog was then laid on the table and ether was given till it had become insensible. The larynx was then cut and a silver tube connected to a bellows inserted. The dog was kent living for some cut and a silver tube connected to a bellows inserted. The dog was kept living for some time by artificial respiration. The body being opened the doctor explained th action of ether on the heart and nervous system. The lungs were inflated and allowed to collapse when the animal tried to breathe of its own accord. The beating of the heart continued in this w y for about fifteen minutes. The heart beat regularly and naturally until the lungs were allowed to collapse for some time when it almost stopped. Artificial respiration was resorted to again and the heart commenced to beat as vigorously as ever. Chloroform was then given and the action of the heart closely watched. The organ had a convul sive action. This showed, explained the doctor, that chloroform was more dangerous than ether as it paralyzed the heart. ous than ether as it paralyzed the heart.

New York Truth: It is to be hoped the New York Truth: It is to be hoped the projected race between Hanlan and Ross will not be allowed to fall through on account of any pecuniary differences. Those who take an interest in rowing matters are decidedly anxious to see Hanlan round off his marvelous career by beating Ross, the only man to whom he ever lowered his colors. It will be remembered, however, that in the race where this occurred (a regatta) Hanlan was unquestionably very ill. Had almost any other carsman given upf the race in the middle of the course—Courtney, for instance—upon the pretext that he was ill, there would have been a good many doubting Thomases. But Hanlan has made a record that places him where Cæsar's wife should have been—above suspicion. For this reason we should all like to see Hanlan and Ross ceme together.
