They go, a fresh and beautiful band, To the sunny sky of the " spirit land." To the music soft of an angel choir, They hymn their joy on a golden lyre; Gladly, ah gladly, they soar away, As a bird uncaged, or a child at play

They go while the rainbow of hope is fair, I:s arch unbroken by sin or care; While the rosy tint of their life's young glow, Is as bright as a sunteam on bedseof snow And they pass as gently, as softly on, As the snow flake melting, till all are gone.

They go while untouched by the opening blast Which withering time on the old hath cast, While fancy painteth the amethyst hue With the diamond glittering and blending through, As the nightly host in the mildest bear Or th' impassioned trust of the lover's dream

They go-and why should they linger have, Outliving all gifts that are sweet and dear, Till the crystal drop of the morning Sies, And life's fair stream at the fountain dries? Ah! mourn for the things that to earth are wed But not all mourn not, the early dead.

Curious Detection of a Robber .--At the Stockport petty sessions, o Saturday week, two men name Partington and Hurst were chaged with a burglary in enterm the house of Mr. Lingard, of Stock port. The principal piece of ev dence against Hurst, who is a sol dier on furlough, consisted of the mark of his teeth in a pot of butter : He happened to have a broken; tooth of very peculiar form, and baving whilst plund-ring the house indulged himself with a mouthful of butter, he had left the shape of his teeth so distinctly imprinted upon the remainder, as to leave no doubt about his guilt.
