LITERARY CLUB. In tenor with our editorial notice of last week, we proceed to give a brief sketch of the Rev. ALEX. M'LEAN's highly interesting the Rev. ALEX. M'LEAN's highly interesting Lecture upon the "Earth's figure and mo-tion," This literary gentleman (to whom we are indebted for his personal exertions in the behalf of our little Institute) concluded on Monday last his observations upon this judi-cious subject. In the preliminary part, the lecturer observed upon the many plausible theories that existed, as to the general pro-perties of other Planets; whilst deductions of the physical nature of our own, were tested f the physical nature of our own, were tested by actual surveys on the Earth's surface. The globular or spherical form of the Earth, he lucidly demonstrated by analogy to other orbs in the planetary system : as uniformly exist-ing to the eye of the observer, the appearance of a flat circle, portioning to no other but a globular or spherical form, which was further confirmed by the eclipses of the moon, the convexity of the ocean and the effect of ele-vation upon an encourage bin of the second rotation upon their axis; their periodical motion he supported by their slow but conti-nuous movements in the Heavens, and regular
