Montreal's Charter Committee have allowed the law regarding exemptions on church property to stand as before.

According to our contemporary, The Canadian Churchman, Methodism in Canada is sapping the strength of the other Protestant denominations.

Forty years ago thousands of the victims of misrule in Ireland reached the vicinity of Montreal fever-stricken and despairing.

The following report and protest, made by Rev. Francis Doherty, C.S.B., army chaplain at Manila, to Major General Otis, commanding officer there, has resulted in the returning to the United States of the person complained of.

There faithful to their duty and about out to your command.

The government organs, notwithstanding the friendly references made to Canada, in President McKinley's message to Congress, are preparing the public for the announcement of the failure of the continued negotiations at Washington.

One incident of this bank robbery trial must not be allowed to pass without comment.

The actual value to England of all the jingo talk in which our politicians are competing, may, we think, be measured by the failure to recruit the Leinster Regiment in Canada.

In connection with the general subject of the modern art of recruiting it may be that the Americans understand it better than the English.

Never have a Canadian judge and jury heard a case surrounded more plainly with danger signals of a possible error of justice than the bank robbery trial at Napanee last week.

who was accused of treachery to his employers for a share in the treasure.

The Monitor, published at Ottawa, makes a reference to the work being done by the Toronto Separate Schools, that displays a surprising want of knowledge of the facts.

While we are on this question, let us say a word about the D. L. Salle graduating class of '93 which may not be quite relevant; however it cannot be altogether devoid of interest for our readers.

The Liberals and Home Rule.

We publish in another column a speech delivered by Honorable Edward Blake before the Women's Liberal Organization, at a dinner in London, on November 28.

athletic training, an object which objects would be a blessing in this country.

Robert's goes Wrong.

"Mr. Charles G. D. Roberts, poet, remarks in the current Harper's, by way of showing that England and America are of one race, that the blood that fathered Farragut is the blood that fathered Blake," the famous admiral.

ing that no words could exaggerate the value of the local government.

They were not the authors of this transfer to the people of local self government, but the great laborer who accomplished more, attempted more, and sacrificed more for Ireland than any other statesman in this century.

The final words certainly offer no encouragement to the Irish representatives, whose friendship for the Liberal party is not what some would-be leaders of the leaderless Liberal party once more wish to make it, an article of their expediency.

The public ought to know Rev. Dr. Langtry's quotations quite well. They are familiar acquaintances. The Dr. always uses the same old set.

Dr. Langtry Again.

The Mail, on Tuesday, published a letter from Dr. Langtry the opening sentences of which are exquisite.

we are not surprised that our excellent contemporary, The Pilot, has sought him blundering.

Charles G. D. Roberts is very good at his lyrics, but if the production of his that appears in the Christmas number of The Globe be a sample he ought to give up writing short stories until he can write something better than balderdash.

The "Black Abbe" is represented as a terrible monster, who at the head of a band of Indians seeks the life of a young British officer.

He must think his Protestant readers to be little children anxious to hear a bungled up tale about the mysteries of their pet bugaboo.

Sir—A friend has called my attention to a lecture delivered by the Hon. G. W. Ross in Old St. Andrew's school-house on "Canadian History."

Observe that there are three exclamation marks to indicate the Dr.'s amazement. But the occasion did not find him at any loss for words, because he had a crusty old quotation at hand as of yore, and he took upon the whole lot and fired them high and dry at the head of the unfortunate Mr. Ross.
