The sewing machine trade will be interested to learn that the well-known house of H. B. Goodrich, Chicago, has sold out the entire business and good-will to Foley & Williams of Cincinnati. Wm. C. Foley of the firm is one of the many young Canadians who have made their mark in Chicago. Entering as an office boy in 1879 with the wholesale house of H. B. Goodrich, he advanced by degrees till, at the end of five or six years, he became a partner in the business, and with Mr. D. Williams bought out the Cincinnati branch about four years ago. And now the original firm has been bought out by the former employees. Mr. Goodrich retires from business.

M. A. McLEAN, wholesale grocer and liquor dealer, Winnipeg, has been compelled to suspend payment, and, we are told, has decided to assign in trust. This failure may probably bring down two or three other respectable grocers in that city who have been operating more or less with McLean in real estate. Mr.

McLean has generally been rated for some time past by fair business firms, and among others his bankers, as worth a surplus of $75,000; it is hoped, therefore, that the estate will ultimately pay in full; yet real estate is so utterly stagnant in Winnipeg now that if forced to a sale, as assets of this class undoubtedly are, under an assignee, the loss to merchandise creditors may be heavy.

A DESPATCH says: Wm. T. Strong, a London, Ont., druggist is being sued on behalf of the Society for the Prevention of Vice to recover the $7,500 prize he won at the recent Masonic lottery, the money being forfeited under the statute. Mr. Strong pleads that he was only trustee for Mr. Thomas H. Brunton, the manager of the lottery, who was the beneficial owner of the ticket, and that, having paid over the money to Brunton, he (Strong) is not liable to be sued in this action. Brunton makes a statement to the effect that he received $50 from his brother, William A. Brunton, of Chicago, with the request that he should purchase a book of tickets. He did so, and handed the book over to Mr. Strong, and asked him to take care of the tickets for his brother William.

Mr. R. H. Kilby, who has carried on business in this city for upwards of twenty years past as a wholesale dealer in fire-arms, has at last been obliged to suspend. Finding himself in debt beyond possibility of recovery, he made an offer of compromise to his creditors some few months ago, and succeeded in procuring the consent of all except his factors, Keep Bros. of Birmingham, Eng., who held out for full payment of the amount of their claim, some $1,500. Mr. Kilby, through a friend, had succeeded in arranging this matter, when one of his three bankers, with whom he had opened an account some six months ago, refused to accept less than 50 cents in the dollar, or double the offer made the creditors. This compelled him to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors generally. The total liabilities are about $120,000, of which nearly $70,000 is due to his bankers,—about $30,000 each to two of them, and about $7,000 to the third; the balance being due in England and the United States. Mr. Kilby is a son-in-law of Mr. T. H. Judah of this city, and his handsome English face and figure, reminding one, though much younger, of the picture of Col. Newcome in the illustrated edition of Thackeray's celebrated novel, are well-known to our citizens, especially to all
