

were used in his House ; since it is not to be supposed that any such would perjure himself, for saving, — if the Master of the greatest Family, 20 s. a Year, which should be the highest Tax ; or 5 s. a Year, if of the lowest sort that drink Tea. But if it might be apprehended that some would Transgress ; the Pillory, or some adequate Punishment should, as in other cases of Perjury be strictly Inflicted, besides a pecuniary Fine, upon any that will dare transgress.

The fair Dealer would receive great Benefit by it, as none could afford to sell Tea cheaper than the Market price ; which is now done in every part of this Kingdom, but more particularly upon the Western, Southern, and Eastern Coasts of England, in so much that it's computed above Two thirds of the Tea drank in Great Britain is run. The perplexities and disquietudes given the fair Dealer, by Excise Officers, on pretence of searching, would no longer continue. The East-India Company would be great Gainers by this, as well as the Consumers ; and the Public Revenue which upon an Average,
