There is no wetting used in the cake, but the butter must be well beaten, also the eggs, but when I make beaten, also the eggs, but when I make the cake for family use I use a cup of milk and enough flour to make it stiff.

Sincerely SKINNY.

Ans.—Thank you for letting us know, "Skinny." I will repeat the recipe for the benefit of those who like to try new recipes, especially ones good for overseas cakes: Two eggs, I cup granulated sugar, I cup butter, 2 cups raisins, I cup mixed peel, & cup almonds, I teaspoon baking soda, I teaspoon cream tartar and flour to thicken. Bake in a moderate oven, and when nearly done cover with pieces of paper to prevent burning.

MY FACES

There are, perhaps, few crueller sentences than that overworked remark, "She's a two-faced sort of a person." And yet it is really a fact that these words embody a compliment which few of us deserve. In my own case, for instance, it would be far more accurate to say, "She's a twenty-faced person," or even "She's a forty-faced person." This may seem to be a humiliating confession, but it is the truth. I made this fatal discovery but a few days ago when I met an out-of-town acquaintance while walking on Fifth avenue. As soon as I saw her I knew that she was an old friend, but somehow I couldn't place her. I felt, vaguely, that she was from Chicago, or Boston, or Des Moines, or Kalamazoo, or some one of those other suburbs from which people are always coming to New York, but I couldn't tell which,—nor did I know who or what she was. Of course, I knew her, and she knew me, and everything would have been all right if I'd just known what face to wear. But I didn't. I didn't know whether, when in her presence, I usually wore a cordial face, or a smart face, or a superior face, or a grateful face. It was the most unpleasantly undressed feeling I have ever experienced. I kept shifting faces and in between, when I didn't have any on, I felt embarrassingly nude. Then suddenly she made a trivial remark which placed her and labelled her and caused just the right face to slip from its hook in my mental storeroom.

It was this little experience that made me look myself firmly in the face-I mean, the faces. The result was quite appalling. To be sure, the faces worn for the women of my acquaintance are fairly similar, varying chiefly in expression. But when it comes to the men of my acquaintance faces are very, very different.

For instance, there is one man of my acquaintance who knows even less than I do. For him I have a special highbrow face. It is one of the most successful visages I possess. As soon as it slips into place, all the odds and ends of highbrow information that I've gathered from a careful perusal of the current magazines—lines from Tagore, facts about winning the war, and names of the newest celebrities—take their place in the wings ready to appear at the proper cue. Sometimes my conversation becomes positively intelligent. With the comforting knowledge that my op-ponent doesn't know enough to doubt, question, or lead me beyond my depth, I dance merrily through-or over-Art, Modern Drama and Literature-and I've been told that this man considers me a most interesting and well-informed person.

There are, however, certain others who would call my bluff, and for them I have a totally different face. Its most important features are wide ncredulous eyes. When I wear it my entire conversation consists of "How interesting. Isn't that wonderful! Do tell me more about it. You must have seen a lot and read a lot to know so much." These are the men who really like me.

One of my faces was moulded by the fact that the gentleman for whom it is worn met me at a picnic where I had made the sandwiches. He liked them and decided that I was domestic. In fact, he was so cer-In about it that he fairly creased domestic lines into the particular face I happened to be wearing. They've stayed there ever since. When he asks to call, everything but domesticity fades automatically from my mind. If I go in the subway I find myself hungrily reading fascinating facts about Lux and Dutch Cleanser and the value of bran in the home. And all the conversation I've ever overheard about the servant problem come rallying to the front.

One of my acquaintances is responsible for my ownership of a somewhat improper face. He is, of course, an extremely and proper person Indeed, he's so very stiff and proper that the first time I met him I felt called upon to discuss Ellen Key. I don't know much about Ellen Key, but he knew less, and I found his ignorance positively inspiring. The information I gave him was lengthy and extremely good for him, but I fear that it would give that estimable lady a distinct shock should she hear of it. She is, I believe, somewhat advanced, but I think I got about two hundred years ahead of her. He still calls, occasionally, wearing the expression of one who visits Greenwich Village, not because he likes it, but because it is a broadening experience. However, I do not save this face for him and him alone. Not by any means. These are days that demand conservation and efficiency, and I use this face as often as possible, instead of searching for a new one.

I sometimes think it would be very nice to find a man with whom one could wear any one of these faces, according to one's mood. But I have never found the man. He is, I suppose, the man one marries MARJORIE HILLIS.

to be so neat about it. Nevertheless, this sizzling, sultry, hot weather has not made me a greease spot yet. Spent a week's vacation in your city this summer, and it seemingly has left a lasting impression with me. Its attractive avenues and the cleanliness of the whole, I am sure would appeal to any one. In fact, I must admit, I thoroughly enjoyed it all.

I suppose all the readers have gorgeous bcds of popples and asters. Alas! Poor me! My plans all proved disastrous. Little sister's cat "Snowball" evidently thought the flower bed an ideal place to sun herself. Results were rather bad for temper and flowerbed, and if a sudden visitor had not stepped in, it might have been flowers and slow music for pussy, and then, I won't mention the fact that the chickens had an admirable scratching place, too.

You asked me to call and let you know about "Crazy Dan's" family. Well, he was a splendid behaved fellow, and has hatched as splendid afamily as you would want to see, mothered by four good old biddies.
