Herbert Light, of the Summer's Stock Company, met with a painful accident at the Mountain Theatre, July 2. He had the role of the pretended Indian, in "A Stranger in Strange Land," and tripped on his skank. His arms, being inside, he could not save himself, and fell heavily to the stage floor. A doctor was called at the close of the performance. He found that Mr. Light had splintered his right shoulder bone, and ordered him to lay up for a week. But that would have forced the theatre management to close, as much of the play centred around his part, and no one available could take his place. So he plucked up his courage, and played the balance of the week with his right arm strapped to his side, and suffering much pain. This week he is better, but still has his arm in a sling, and has many friends in Toronto, where he resides for a time, who will be sorry to hear of his accident.

June 18 The New York Dramatic Mirror published a portrait and sketch of Mr. Light's good work as an actor.

SUNDAY WORLD FASHION TALK

BY MAY MANTON

FASHIONABLE COSTUMES OF SILK AND LINEN

SILK in its new light weights makes a most fascinating material for mid-summer wear and is greatly in vogue but linen also is extensively worn and fashionable costumes show both fabrics.

The silk gown in the illustration combines a tunic effect with plain. The blouse is one of the very new ones that has a shaped closing and long, close-fitting sleeves sewed to the armholes. The skirt can be made in either two or four panels as the material is wide or narrow and the finished edges are lapped onto narrow panels at the sides.

For the medium size, the blouse will require 3 1/4 yards of material 27, 2 1/4 yards 30 or 2 yards 44 inches wide, with 1/4 yard for the collar; the skirt 4 1/2 yards 27, 3 1/4 yards 30 or 2 1/2 yards 44 inches wide, with 1 1/4 yards 21 inches wide for the panels.

DESIGNS BY MAY MANTON.

7813 Blouse with Ropesierre Collar, 34 to 44 bust. 7823 Tuxedo Blouse, 34 to 40 bust.

7770 Two or Four-Piece Skirt, 22 to 30 waist. 7784 Four Gored Skirt, 22 to 34 waist.

The May Manton pattern of the blouse 7813 is cut in sizes from 34 to 44 inches bust; measure of the skirt 7770 from 22 to 30 inches waist measure.

The linen costume shows one of the very new bodices that is made with a bosom and tuxedo collar. It is exceedingly fashionable and especially well adapted to linen although it can be utilized for any reasonable fabric, and in this case, for the medium size, the blouse will require 3 1/4 yards of material 27, 2 1/4 yards 30, 1 1/4 yards 44 inches wide, with 1/4 yard 18 inches wide for the bosom and cuffs; the skirt 5 yards 27, 4 yards 30 or 2 1/2 yards 44 inches wide.

The May Manton pattern of the blouse 7823 is cut in sizes from 34 to 40 inches bust; measure of the skirt 7784 from 22 to 34 inches waist measure.

The above patterns will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of 15 cents for each.

Queen Mary Discovers That All Her Maids are Members of the Militants.

LONDON, July 12.—Queen Mary, who ever since her visit to Germany has been living in constant terror of the suffragettes, who are said to be plotting to capture one of the royal children, was greatly shocked some time ago by the discovery that not one but several believers in the militant idea had got inside the palace walls and had been in touch with the royal family every day for several months.

The Queen, immediately before she went abroad discovered a parlor maid in the royal apartments wearing the dreaded badge of the Women's Social and Political Union. On the advice of the secret service department, nothing was said about the discovery at the time and the girl was even permitted to keep her position after a long talk with Queen Mary whom she willingly promised not to take advantage of her position to split away any of the royal children.

During the last few weeks a quiet investigation of the political creed of all women, high and low, occupied inside the palace walls, brought out the astonishing fact that practically every maid employed by the royal family was a militant suffragette, and that a great number of aristocratic ladies holding high court positions were ardent followers of Mrs. Pankhurst.

When Queen Mary, who until the suffragettes began to commit illegal and criminal acts of violence, had been a believer in political rights for women, found herself surrounded by militant suffragettes she at first intended to get rid of all the suspected ones, and it was because of this that Lady Schoupsbury suddenly resigned. The Queen accepted her resignation with perfect equanimity, but was greatly perturbed when it was followed by the resignation of her chief dresser who was in charge of that part of her wardrobe intended to be used during her visit to Berlin. For several days consideration was given at Buckingham, as several of the Queen's dresses were not yet ready. The chief dresser steadily refused to budge, but in the eleventh hour the diplomacy of Queen Alexandra resulted in a compromise whereby Queen Mary gave up her first severe course and had to be satisfied with a promise by the suffragettes inside the palace walls that they would not openly wear the W. S. P. U. badge while on duty in the royal residences and that they would not distribute seditious literature among the other employees.

The Queen, however, since the last mad exploits of the suffragettes, does not trust these promises and special detectives are watching the royal children night and day.

THE MANICURE LADY.

"There is a lady lecturing around the country," said the Manicure Lady, "on the subject of how much education a girl should have before she is ready to be a wife and mother. The lady lecturer must be a college woman, because she says that for one thing no girl ought to get into matrimony until she has went thru some college. Now, ain't that the limit? Goodness knows, George, I have never went thru no college, the nobody would have thought it until I told them, but I ain't ready to step right up to the altar and whisper them sweet words that makes so much trouble in the world, then do, woman."

"That's all nonsense," agreed the Head Barber. "My wife never went to college, and she is just as smooth a wife and mother as you would ever want to see. She can't figure out no problems in geometry, but she can make $2 a week look like Carnegie's income when it comes to managing a house, and she knows more love than Latin. She couldn't be no better wife if she had went to 20 colleges."

"This lecturer says that in order to be a perfect wife and mother, one should have read all about all the great lovers and wives of olden times, that sound kind of like hot air to me, because most of the great lovers in history that I have read about wouldn't be no example for a bride to copy after nowadays. Fancy a girl marrying some beautiful girl that was killed like Cleopatra and settling down with her in Jersey somewhere. Imagine her cutting loose the way Cleopatra did, or Katherine of Russia! Oh, dear, I guess the merry livers wouldn't have nothing to talk about at all, would they, George?"

"She would get pinched on the start," said the Barber. "That kind of speed don't go no more. If a wife and mother had to go thru college there wouldn't be so many happy homes as there is," said the Manicure Lady. "I don't make no difference to a man whether the girl he loves ever went to college or not. Love is blind, you know, and a good girl going to be too hard on an unlearned lady if she is there with the form and face and disposition. Brother Wilfred is going with dolls, and he thinks he is going to marry. The poor boy writes her about three poems a day and moves about her like the rest of the time. He calls her his Minerva, and you can't beat that title, can you? Minerva was the Goddess of Wisdom. Wilfred told me, but this girl he is in love with don't know a Greek goddess from a second-rate chorus girl doing the small time. She was up to the house a few minutes the other night, with an older sister that didn't know any more than she did. She handled her English the worst I have ever saw it handled, and all the time there set my poor foot on her beaming at her kind of tender and whispering 'Minerva, my Minerva.' Gee! George, I have the willies for fair. You might as well call Kid Broad 'Apollo, my Apollo!'"

"Bad to Worse." "Yes, I guess love is blind enough," said the Barber. "And even if it will if you will assist me. I expect a lot of book learning from the women they want to make their wives. Two much book learning might put a wife where she saw a lot of shortcomings in her own husband, and usually when things go wrong in the household things keeps going from bad to worse until the beans are spilled."

"I've got education enough to keep a husband's love," said the Manicure Lady. "I guess I'm not enough to land the husband in the first place, much as I have went to school."

Silk Sash as Bathing Costume

Wound Several Times Around Hips, is Latest Style For French Women.

PARIS, July 11.—The opening of the sea-shore resorts has given French coast officers, the modistes of Paris, almost as much scope as does the opening of the racing season, and there being no Comstocks in the land of liberty, equality and fraternity, the fashions grow more interesting each year.

The latest bathing style for women consists of nothing more than a silk sash wound several times round the hips and knotted in front. That's all—except a broad brimmed hat.

It might be thought that a broad brimmed hat is an inconvenience while swimming, but with most French women this is not so. They overcome the embarrassment of a hat by not swimming.

The bathing season is merely an opportunity for the display of figures and fashions.

The Nest of Home

Build thou the little nest of home As birds their nests amid the trees, Sweet with the light from yon blue dome

And bring with morning melodies From room to room and hall to hall, Furnish it forth with love and trust, That 'gainst what ruin may befall, Ye may establish it in dust.

Build it where fancy and delight, And apt affection may peep in, Safe in the wide and vasty night From every influence of sin.

Line it with old affections, true As needle to the Northern Pole, And furnish it with kindness, too, And tender thoughts and self-control.

It will be beautiful some day Beneath its bloomy vines to rest, And with love's pristine memories play At once more building love's own nest.

Two lovers just at life's sweet trim, With beauty of the morning there, And in each heart a holy hymn, And on each tongue a heavenly prayer.

—The Bentzton Bard.
