The Captain of the Kansas
By LOUIS TRACY.

Elise noted that Count Edouard de Poincarré came with the rest, and sat beside Isobel. Countess de Poincarré put in an appearance later to partake of a hasty meal. He gave Monsieur a black look, but, of course, Monsieur said nothing. Elise, who was seated next to him, said nothing. Elise, who was seated next to him, said nothing. Elise, who was seated next to him, said nothing.

Dr. Christal and Gray were in great form, while Tollenache actually told a story. When the captain sent Boyle down from the bridge, Elise made Tollenache repeat it—a simple yarn, detailing an all-night search for a Devonshire village, which he could not find because some village had deemed it funny to turn a signpost the wrong way round.

When the captain sent Boyle down from the bridge, Elise made Tollenache repeat it—a simple yarn, detailing an all-night search for a Devonshire village, which he could not find because some village had deemed it funny to turn a signpost the wrong way round.

"Hush, that's odd," said Boyle. "Reminds me of a thing that happened to a friend of mine, a slipper of the flower of the Ocean brig. Brown his name was, and he had a wooden leg. The day his son's heir was born, he dropped into a gim-mal to celebrate, and his stump stuck in a rope-net. He swore a bit, but he chanced to see on one of the half doors the 'King.' Dash me says, 'Them's two fine names for the kid—Nemo King Brown'—a bit of all right, eh? So he goes home and tells the 'mama. After christening, he took a two or two round the two halves of the door were closed and any one could see that the letters stood for 'No Smoking.' Well, the other fellows told me his language was so sultry that his prop quavered."

Crawling quietly into the Straits of Magellan at daylight, the ship put forth her best efforts in the run through the narrow. Passing Cape San Isidro, she signalled her name, and it was easy to see the commission created by her appearance. The real furor began when she approached Sandy Point. A steam launch pulled off hastily from the side of a Chilean war ship, and the commander brought the news that he had been sent specially from Coronel to search the western coast line thoroughly for the Kansas. He was about to return that day, to report his failure to discover any trace of the missing vessel, and he listened in amazement when Christal gave him a succinct history of the ship's doings. At the end, Countess presented him with a photograph of Elise's chart, to which many additions had been made by her under her lover's directions. The position of the shoal, and of Pillar Rock, together with the set of the tidal current, were clearly shown, and it is probable that Good Hope Inlet, notwithstanding its dangerous approach, will be thoroughly surveyed one of these days. Then, perhaps, more may be heard of those lumps of silver and copper ore which the savages buried at the Kansas.

Sinking Sensations, Loss of Control Indicate Decay of Health

At the outset these very distressing sensations indicate that the sympathetic nervous system is being starved, and in consequence, rendered very irritable. One portion of the nerve organization is deprived of a sufficient supply of blood, and to make matters worse other portions are burdened with an excess of blood.

To restore equilibrium and tone to the entire nervous organization nothing acts with such certain results as Ferrone. Clearly it is the duty of weak, nervous people to use Ferrone which contains the exact constituents that are needed to restore the debilitated nerve cells.

Even in those cases where cure seems almost hopeless, quick benefit attends the use of Ferrone which goes right to the source of the nerve weakness. The efficacy of this great nerve tonic has been demonstrated so many times that the permanency of its cure is undoubted.

The best medicine for restoring vitality and strength is Ferrone.

WHAT WILL BECOME OF THE CANADIAN SENATE?

It's Fate Was Discussed in House of Commons Yesterday--Some Members Would Abolish It As Useless While All Favor It's Reform.

Ottawa, Jan. 20.—In the house today Mr. Foster moved for a return showing all advances to ministers of the crown and their private secretaries on account of travelling or other expenses in connection with the imperial conference.

Mr. McIntyre, South Perth, moved the following resolution:

"That this house deem it expedient to invite the honorable the senate, to co-operate with it by means of conferences or joint committee in giving consideration to the advantages to be gained by changes in the composition of the senate, looking to:

- "1. An age limit for retirement and a shortened term of service for future senators."
- "2. An extension to other authorities, than the present one, of power to select persons for the filling of a portion of future vacancies in the senate."
- "3. A rearrangement of some of the duties and work of the two houses."
- "4. And in making recommendations in regard to these and other changes calculated to place the senate in a position of increased usefulness and of increased responsibility to the people."

In speaking to it he said that it was decided to discuss to prevail, I acted for myself the same subject at the same time. The resolution in the name of Mr. Miller, South Grey, was as follows:

"That the Canadian senate as an institution has not proved to be of any decided benefit to Canada and cannot be regarded as a necessity. That the disadvantages connected with and resulting from the maintaining of the senate greatly outweigh the advantages and benefits derived therefrom, and that the senate may with advantage and gain be abolished."

Mr. Lewis of West Huron had the third resolution which read:

"That in the opinion of this house it will be advisable at the next general election for the house of commons for Canada to submit the following questions for the votes of the people:

- "1. Shall the senate of Canada be abolished?"
 - "2. Shall the method of appointment of the senators of Canada be altered?"
- Mr. McIntyre said that there were numerous evidences of dissatisfaction with the senate. Some change was necessary. It was the conditions surrounding the members of the senate and not the senators, that he was discussing. The question really was to end or mend the senate. Abolition was not workable. It would place the destinies of Canada with the commons. Abolition would also require a referendum. One remedy was a lesser average age of senators.
- The country would gain if the senate was composed of members twenty-five per cent appointed by provincial legislatures, fifty by the dominion government, and a number by the opposition in the commons. The present was a good time for a change.
- Mr. Lewis spoke briefly. He was not in favor of abolition, but favored a material change.
- Mr. Miller spoke in favor of abolition. The senate was comparatively useless, not necessary and not worth its cost to the people. The house of Lords was less objectionable than the senate.
- Continuing, Mr. Miller said that the sovereign in England had power to appoint new members in the House of Lords but there was no check in the Canadian senate, and besides the senators were paid. In the senate there were able men, but there was no check in the Canadian senate. He had no idea that the senate was any check on hasty legislation or that it afforded protection of the smaller provinces. No more appointments should be made and when the number is reduced to 50 it should be abolished. The fifty could retain the title of "honorable" and $2,000 a year while they live.
- The debate was continued by Mr. Schell tion leader had never given in a concrete form what should be done. Changes did not always mean reform. The first change should be in the number of senators appointed. The number was now altogether too large. To abolish the senate was too drastic. It was a protection to the smaller provinces. The state of New York had no more senators than Rhode Island.

Instead of the present system each province should be represented by a limited number. Now they were represented by groups. His remedy was that each province should benefit the same. Let us say six that would give a senate of fifty-four which would be a pretty strong body. Ontario in that body would have no more than Prince Edward Island. He said six but it might be more. What he would insist on would be that all provinces would be alike represented on the same footing. Senators ought to be appointed for a limited term. As to the manner of appointment, he wished it was some way else. But having the power they had to do the best they could. No one would desire more elections.

It had been suggested that the house should appoint the senators, but he was not quite sure that would maintain provincial representation, but for that he might support it. He thought both parties should be represented. The senate should be reformed, and the question was with lace and ribbon face, roses and rosette. Ribbon ties and twist of ribbon finishing head of ruche.

Mr. Foster agreed with a good deal of what the premier said. So far as he was concerned he had no quarrel with the constitution of the senate. If the senate maintained the character and influence which it formerly possessed there would be no dissatisfaction with it. It was not because of the constitution that the people were opposed to the senate. The manner and quality of the appointments were the cause of dissatisfaction. The debate was instructive and all the more so because not conducted on party lines. Good work was done by men who did not run elections. The senate was wrong because it was the absolute creation of one man. The senate should be reduced to one-half. The older provinces would not be satisfied with less than ten and it would not be possible to give ten to P. E. Island, with its four members. About one term of parliament would be sufficient for a senator, and election by the house would not do. He believed in an elective senate, with different constituencies from the commons with, say, a ten years term. The provinces should be the electoral division. They should trust to the common sense of the people. The debate was adjourned.

Mr. Crockett was informed by the premier that the contractor for the I. C. R. right car repair shop at Moncton was E. A. Wallberg, the bulk sum contracted for was $56,630, to date $34,547 had been paid on account. There have been no extras. The contract for the passenger car repair shop, passenger car paint shop and office building at Moncton were awarded to E. A. Wallberg under a tender of $124,945. On account of the paint shop $147,738 has been paid. No extras have been paid. The contract for I. C. R. planing mill at Moncton was awarded to Rhodes, Curry & Co. for $23,965, and has not been transferred. To date $23,007 has been paid on construction account. There have been no extras.

The steamer Landdowne took down Black Point buoy yesterday and placed it in position.

The United States senate was one of the most useful bodies in the world. It was said that only rich men could get into the senate there, but for himself he would rather see a rich man get there than a poor man to go there and get rich. As to an elective senate, how many men would like to run for a whole province? Only a very wealthy man could do so. Men who would make excellent senators would not like to do so. It would come to the party nominees of those in the provinces. That would not be a good plan to get senators. His own view was that the present system was better, to get those in the senate who represented the various interests of the country. At present men in the different walks of life could be secured in the senate who would make excellent senators, would not face a contest.

Summarized briefly the doctor favored a time limit, but not an age limit, as it was very few agreed as to what should be done. The constitution of the senate was unsatisfactory. The conservatives had now come to that conclusion. The difficulty was to get a remedy. Although in office for twelve years the party was not yet able to find a remedy. The opposition would not face a contest.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that while there were many suggestions for improvement very few agreed as to what should be done. The constitution of the senate was unsatisfactory. The conservatives had now come to that conclusion. The difficulty was to get a remedy. Although in office for twelve years the party was not yet able to find a remedy. The opposition would not face a contest.
